torman cannot assume that the driver of a vehicle approaching the track at a street intersection is aware of the approach of the streetcar and neglect to give warning,⁹² unless it is reasonably apparent that the driver is aware of the approach of the car,⁹³ and the motorman will not necessarily be absolved from negligence merely because a driver should have seen the car.⁹⁴ Where there is a collision between a streetcar and a vehicle, the question of signals has been held to be of importance only where the collision occurred at a street intersection,⁹⁵ or where night or bad weather made such signals necessary in the exercise of due care to warn a vehicle ahead of the approach of the car, as discussed infra § 240.

A motorman of a standing streetcar at an intersection must sound a proper warning if necessary before starting his car,⁹⁶ and a motorman who starts his car from a standing position, and without warning runs it into a vehicle using a street crossing, is negligent.⁹⁷ Where a motorman of a standing car signals a motorist to come ahead while another streetcar, with which the motorist collides, is moving toward the intersection, the street railroad company is not guilty of actionable negligence where the motorist sees and is aware of the approaching car.⁹⁸

sound a gong or give other warning on approach to an intersection may be imposed by statute or ordinance,⁹⁹ and the motorman is negligent in failing to sound his signal, even though a motorist sees the approaching streetcar,¹ although the violation of an ordinance relating to the sounding of the gong at street crossings has been held not to be negligence per se.² The violation of an ordinance requiring the continuous ringing of a bell on a streetcar while in motion does not render the company guilty of negligence per se in a crossing accident,³ although the ordinance is in a condition in the grant of franchise to the company, since such condition is unreasonable.⁴

Signaling devices at road crossings. If a signaling device at an interurban railroad crossing is reasonably necessary to warn travelers of the approach of cars or trains, the interurban railroad is under a duty to install one,⁵ even though it has not been directed to do so by the public authorities,⁶ and, where it undertakes to install such a device, it is obligated to use reasonable care in the construction and maintenance thereof.⁷ The protection it should give at the crossing may depend on the number of trains and people using it.⁸ In the absence of a statutory requirement, an interurban railroad need not maintain crossing signs elsewhere than on its own property,⁹ and at an ordinary crossing is not obligated to install devices it, and, where he is fully aware of existence of the danger, warning is unnecessary.—O'Neill v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., 7 N.W.2d 665, 213 Minn. 514.

Where evidence established that crossing signaling system was so constructed that, when one train followed another on track on which accident occurred within six hundred feet, signal would cease to operate when first train cleared crossing, the fact that placement of switches could have been adjusted so as to give warning of approach of all trains could be considered by jury in determining whether company used reasonable care in installation and operation of signaling system.—*Startup v. of any particular type.¹⁰ Where the matter of crossing safety devices is regulated by statute or ordinance, there should be a due compliance therewith, but a substantial compliance is sufficient.¹¹ The absence of a suitable safety device at an interurban road crossing is immaterial where such absence did not contribute to the accident.¹²

§ 240. Operating at Night or under Adverse Weather Conditions

The care exercised by a motorman operating at night or in adverse weather should be commensurate with the conditions encountered.

The motorman of a streetcar is not warranted in assuming that, because of a storm and darkness, no one will be on the track,¹³ and under such conditions he is required to proceed with extra caution,¹⁴ and, where mist and darkness prevent a motorman from observing clearly the position of a motor vehicle,¹⁵ or discovering whether it has cleared the tracks,¹⁶ he should have the car under such control that he can stop it in time to avoid a collision with the vehicle after the rays of the headlight enable him to see it,¹⁷ and, when the brilliance of the lights on a streetcar is reduced under an ordinance requiring them to be screened, the operating speed must be reduced in proportion.¹⁸ A motorman's act in running at an excessive rate of speed without giving warning after seeing a lighted motor vehicle ahead may be negligence,¹⁹ and it has been held that, when because of darkness a motorman is unable to see far enough ahead to give vehicles warning, he must continually sound the gong in anticipation of their being on the track;²⁰ but it seems that this rule does not obtain on a clear night when the car is equipped with a good headlight, where there is no unusual obstruction preventing a view of the car,²¹ and failure to sound the gong is not such negligence as will render the street railroad liable when the driver of a motor vehicle sees the lights of an approaching car in time not to go on the track.²² When running his car at night with the headlight not burning, a motorman must use extraordinary care,²³ but it has been held not to be negligent to fail to have a light on the rear of a snowsweeper streetcar while it is waiting at a railroad crossing.²⁴

It is negligence per se for a street railroad to operate cars at night at a greater rate of speed than will enable those in charge of a car to stop it within the distance covered by its own lights, to avoid collisions with vehicles on the tracks.²⁵

When operating car in fog, the motorman may be negligent in running at a high rate of speed, although he discovers the peril as soon as possible, and does everything in his power to avert a collision, where the peril, although not sooner discovered, might have been averted but for the speed.²⁶ However, if it is shown that a fog did not in any way contribute to an accident, the absence of burning headlights or the failure to sound the gong on a car which collides with a team is not material evi-

Flashing signals

Interurban electric railroad does not owe public duty of maintaining flashing signals or similar warnings at all ordinary crossings in country where there is no unusual danger or extraordinary hazard.—Watson v. Brady, supra.

11. Signs held sufficient

dence of negligence on the part of the street railroad when it does not appear that the absence of such warnings contributed to the injury.²⁷ It has been held that, when fog or rain and snow obscure the view, it is the duty of operatives of streetcars to proceed not in the usual manner, but in a cautious manner, so as to insure the safety of others on a public thoroughfare, and to warn them of danger.²⁸

Where the surface of the street is wet and slippery, the motorman must proceed with care commensurate with such conditions,²⁹ but may assume that a motorist will likewise observe the care required under such circumstances.³⁰ The slippery condition of the intersection is immaterial if it in no way contributes to the accident.³¹

§ 241. Collision with Ambulance

Under some statutes a streetcar must yield the right of way to an ambulance even when traffic signals are set for the car and against the ambulance.

Under some statutes the right of way ordinarily accorded a streetcar at an intersection with the "go" sign in its favor will be denied on approach of an ambulance with siren sounding.³² The failure of a streetcar motorman to observe an ordinance which gave right of way at street intersections to traffic going north and south cannot be relied on by the owner of an ambulance as necessarily creating liability for damages to it in a collision.³³ An ambulance which was under the jurisdiction of a health department, but did not belong to it, which collided with a streetcar, has been held not to be within an ordinance providing that an "ambulance of the department of health" shall have the right of way in the streets.³⁴

Fire apparatus ordinarily has the right of way as against streetcars.

It is the duty of the motorman or other person in charge of a streetcar to give way to, and to use due precaution to avoid colliding with, a fire engine, truck, or wagon,³⁵ and to hold himself in readiness to avoid such collision when he has reason to anticipate that such an engine, truck, or wagon may appear,³⁶ as when he is approaching and passing a house in which they are kept.³⁷ It has been held that at common law firemen going to a fire are given the right of way over streetcars,³⁸ but there is also authority to the contrary.³⁹ Fire apparatus may possess superior rights on the streets by virtue of statute,⁴⁰ ordinance,⁴¹ or custom,⁴² even though the motorman of the streetcar has a green light

Degree of duty

in his favor.⁴³ On the other hand, it has been held that negligence cannot be predicated on the mere fact that a car involved in a collision with fire apparatus was running at a high speed,⁴⁴ and that the only duty resting on a street railroad is to exercise reasonable care under the circumstances.⁴⁵

Under an ordinance specifically giving fire apparatus the right of way, the driver of a fire truck has the right to assume that the motorman of an approaching streetcar, on discovering the truck, will so control the car as to give the truck the right of way,⁴⁶ and that, regardless of intent, proof of negligence establishes a violation of such an ordinance.⁴⁷ The right of way given fire apparatus by such an ordinance is absolute,⁴⁸ the motorman need not know that it is going to a fire,⁴⁹ and he is not excused when it develops that the apparatus was going to a fire unless he did not know, or did not have good reason to believe, that it was approaching.⁵⁰ Under an ordinance providing for a penalty for the obstruction of fire apparatus, negligence on the part of a street railroad, regardless of intent, will establish a violation of the ordinance, and create a liability in favor of one injured as a result of such negligence without fault on his part.⁵¹ Violation of such an ordinance may be regarded as negligence as a matter of law⁵² or negligence per se.⁵³

Company rule. The exercise of precautions as to the peculiar rights of fire apparatus may be required by a rule or regulation of the street railroad.⁵⁴ However, the violation of a company rule relating to speed has been held not to be negligence per se, but evidence bearing on the question whether a faster rate is in accordance with careful management.⁵⁵

§ 243. Collision with Police Vehicle

Police vehicles ordinarily have the right of way over streetcars.

Ordinarily it is the duty of the motorman of a streetcar to yield the right of way to a police vehicle signaling its advance.⁵⁶ Under an ordinance giving a police patrol the right of way, a streetcar motorman is required to stop the car if necessary to yield such right of way,⁵⁷ and such an ordinance applies to street intersections.⁵⁸ By virtue of custom a motorman may be required to stop the car on the approach of a police vehicle,⁵⁹ and the failure of a motorman to stop when it is shown that, if he had been reasonably attentive to the approach of a police patrol, he could have stopped the car in time to have avoided a collision has been held a proximate cause of injury, notwithstanding other causes may have contributed to the accident.⁶⁰

A streetcar company is liable for damage if through the incompetency, inattention, or carelessness of its servants a car collides with an animal not under the control of its owner,⁶¹ and a motorman should slacken speed where the circumstances indicate that this is necessary to avoid injury to the animal.⁶² Although a motorman may not relieve himself of a charge of negligence by relying entirely on the alertness of an animal to avoid injury,⁶³ and may not proceed without regard to the presence of an animal near the tracks,⁶⁴ in the absence of anything to warn him to the contrary he may assume that the animal will not suddenly turn onto the tracks in front of him,⁶⁵ and need not stop the car to avoid injury to it unless there is something about the action and movements of the animal, or its inaction, to show that it is oblivious to the danger or unable to get off the track.⁶⁶ A law relating to the liability of railroad companies for stock killed or injured by its locomotives or cars does not apply to street railroads.⁶⁷

Loose horses. The rule that a motorman may assume that a person on the track will leave the track until it becomes evident that he is oblivious to danger, discussed infra § 251, has no application to loose horses incapable of comprehending danger and of intelligent action;⁶⁸ but it has been held that, when the motorman sees an untied horse some distance away, between the track and the gutter, he is not under the duty to slow down and get the car under such control that he can avoid a collision if the horse suddenly comes onto the track, and he can assume that the horse is gentle until the contrary appears.⁶⁹

5. INJURIES TO PERSONS ON OR NEAR TRACKS

§ 245. In General

It is the duty of a street railroad company to exercise such reasonable and ordinary care in the management and operation of its cars as the particular circumstances may require to avoid injuring persons who may be on or near its tracks.

Since travelers on a public street along which streetcar tracks are laid have an equal right with the street railroad company to use such street, as discussed supra § 207, it is the duty of the company to exercise such reasonable and ordinary care in the management and operation of its cars as the particular circumstances may require, to avoid injuring persons, such as pedestrians or other persons who may be on or near its tracks in such street,⁷⁰ whether the pedestrians are children or adults,⁷¹ and if it fails to exercise such care it is guilty of negligence and liable for injuries caused thereby.⁷² What constitutes ordinary care toward a person who is injured by the operation of a streetcar, while he is on or near the tracks, depends on the circumstances of the particular case,⁷³ and greater precautions are necessary in order to fulfill the rule in some instances than in others.⁷⁴

A streetcar motorman, in the exercise of ordinary care, is not required to do everything in his power to avoid an accident to a pedestrian,⁷⁵ nor is he required to take the care that men of extreme prudence might take,⁷⁶ but he is required to exercise such care as a person of ordinary prudence and caution according to the usual and general experience of mankind would exercise in the same situation and circumstances.⁷⁷ Thus, it is the duty of the company to exercise such care as is reasonably demanded by all the surrounding circumstances, with respect to looking out for persons on or near the track, as discussed infra § 248, the speed and control of the car, infra § 249, the sounding of the bell or gong, infra § 248, and the slowing down and stopping of the car, infra § 251. Where, however, a street railroad company exercises due care in the management and operation of its cars, it is not liable for injuries to individuals on or near its tracks, which result from unavoidable accidents, without any fault on its part.⁷⁸

Custom. Where a person on or near street railroad tracks sustains personal injuries as a direct result of a negligent or improper act of a streetcar motorman, the mere fact that the injurious act was customary will not relieve the company of liability.⁷⁹

Change of relation from passenger to pedestrian. The obligations of a street railway company to a person as a passenger having ended when on alighting he has reached a place of safety on the road,⁸⁰ the company's liability for personal injuries caused by it immediately thereafter must be based on its obligations to individuals lawfully on the street.⁸¹

§ 246. Violation of Statute or Ordinance

The violation of an ordinance by a street railroad company is not negligence toward a person injured unless the ordinance was intended for the protection of such person.

The mere violation of an ordinance in operating a streetcar does not constitute negligence toward a person on or near the track who is injured as a proximate result of such violation, where the ordinance was not intended to protect against injury to such persons;⁸² but an ordinance requiring a streetcar about to pass another car going in the opposite direction at a point where passengers get on or off to reduce its speed and sound a warning is not limited in its application to one who gets off a streetcar or is about to get on.⁸³ A statute providing that no person shall operate a trolley or streetcar without due regard for the safety and rights of pedestrians and other vehicles merely prescribes a general rule of conduct and not a requirement to do or not do a specific act, so that a violation of the statute is not negligence per se.⁸⁴

§ 247. Equipment

A street railroad must exercise a high degree of care to equip its cars with such appliances as will prevent injuries to persons on or near its tracks.

A street railroad must exercise a high degree of care to equip its cars with such appliances as will prevent injuries to persons on or near its tracks,⁸⁵ but it has been held that the duty is only as to discovering and avoiding injury to those persons on or near the track who are using the streets in the usual way.⁸⁶

Lights. Where the headlight on a streetcar is neither different from, nor more powerful than, those in common use on streetcars at night in similar localities, its use at the time a pedestrian is injured cannot properly be found to be negligent,⁸⁷ and the mere fact that a streetcar is equipped with a powerful headlight the rays of which had a tendency to blind a pedestrian as the car approached the point where he is standing does not indicate negligence by the street railroad company.⁸⁸ As to a pedestrian who is struck while crossing the track, the fact that the car had no headlight is immaterial where there was sufficient light to permit the car to have been seen a block away.⁸⁹ With respect to a pedestrian who fell over a fender on a standing streetcar, negligence of the streetcar company cannot be implied from the mere fact that the car was standing unlighted,⁹⁰ where it does not appear that the car so stood for an unreasonable length of time.⁹¹

Brakes. Failure to equip its streetcars with adequate brakes, in violation of a city ordinance, proximately resulting in injuries to a person on the track, is negligence for which the company is liable.⁹²

Fenders. In the absence of a statute requiring that a fender be used, if a proper fender would have prevented an injury, the absence of such a fender is a continuing negligence which will make the streetcar company liable for injuries proximately resulting from failure to provide such fender.⁹³ Under a statute requiring that all railway companies use practical fenders in front of all passenger cars, failure to equip a streetcar with such a fender, resulting in personal injuries to persons on the track, will make the railway company liable.⁹⁴ Under ordinances requiring streetcars to be equipped with fenders, the company may be under a duty, as to persons who are on or near its tracks, to provide its cars with suitable fenders.⁹⁵ Failure to comply with an ordinance requiring cars to be equipped with fenders,⁹⁶ as well as failure to use the particular fender required by ordinance,⁹⁷ has been held to constitute negligence per se. While a street railway company cannot be allowed to violate a statute requiring that streetcars be equipped with fenders, and escape liability on the ground that the company has substituted some other device which, in its judgment, is better,⁹⁸ where the type of fender used is much better and safer than other types in general use, such statute is complied with.⁹⁹

Raising and lowering fender. In the ordinary operation of a streetcar there is no duty on the part of the motorman to drop the fender;¹ that duty arises only when he sees a person in danger of being run over by the car,² and even then the motorman is not negligent for failing to drop the fender, when he had no opportunity to do so.³ Similarly, the motorman cannot be convicted of negligence in failing to lower a fender, under circumstances where it is plain that he had but an instant in which to act, and that acting on impulse he did that which his judgment told him to do.⁴ Failure immediately to lift a streetcar fender at the terminus of the route resulting in injuries to a pedestrian does not constitute negligence⁵ where the fender was not permitted to remain an obstruction for an unreasonable length of time,⁶ particularly where the car was on a downgrade and a rule of the company required the motorman to attend to the brakes until the passengers were discharged and the conductor came to the front of the car,⁷ despite the fact that the motorman might have lifted the fender with a hook when the car came to a stop.⁸ A street railroad company is not negligent toward a pedestrian, who is struck by a fender on the rear of a streetcar, simply because the fender was not raised before the car was backed around a curve where the injury occurred,⁹ particularly where it does not appear that there is any necessity for,¹⁰ or custom of,¹¹ keeping the fenders on the rear end of streetcars raised; and, even where there appears to be a custom of keeping the rear fender raised, the company is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian where, in the particular instance, the fender is down without any want of care on the part of the company.¹²

Overhang. The mere fact that a streetcar is constructed in such a manner that the rear end extends out over the rails a distance of five feet in rounding a curve does not constitute negligence toward a pedestrian who is injured by the overhang of such a car at a curve.¹³

§ 248. Lookouts, Signals, and Other Warnings

a. Lookouts

b. Signals and other warnings

a. Lookouts

It is the duty of the motorman of a streetcar to exercise reasonable and ordinary care to discover persons using the street on or near the track, and likely to be injured by the car, in time to avoid injuring them.

It is the duty of the driver or motorman of a streetcar to exercise reasonable and ordinary care to discover persons using the street on or near the track, and likely to be injured by the car, in time to avoid injuring them,¹⁴ and, if he fails to discover a person on or near the track, when by the exercise of ordinary care he could have done so in time to stop the car or otherwise avoid the injury, it is negligence for which the company is liable.¹⁵ Thus, the streetcar company has been held liable for injuries to persons on or near the tracks when such injuries occurred while the motorman's attention was, at the time of the accident, diverted from a proper lookout to other matters,¹⁶ as where an accident was caused by a moving car while the driver was inside the car collecting fares or making change for passengers,¹⁷ where the motorman's attention was centered on winding up the car sign over his head,¹⁸ where he was looking back into the car instead of looking ahead,¹⁹ where he left the brake and went to the side of the car to look back at some boys attempting to jump on the car and did not again look forward until too late to avoid an accident,²⁰ where the operator of the car was leaning in a listless attitude,²¹ and where he was looking in a direction opposite to that of the movement of the car.²²

The company has been held liable for a failure of the motorman to see a traffic officer who was run down by a streetcar while such officer was directing traffic at a street intersection ahead of the car.²³ It cannot be said that, if a motorman had kept a proper lookout ahead, he would not have been able to see a person on or near the track sooner than another person on the car who was looking ahead.²⁴

At particular places. A streetcar company owes a duty to maintain a careful lookout for persons who may be on or near its tracks, when operating its cars in the streets of a city,²⁵ whether the street is one which is frequently used or one which is seldom used by the public,²⁶ and this duty exists particularly in a thickly populated portion of the city.²⁷ A motorman must keep a vigilant lookout when approaching a place where he knows people are constantly on or approaching the track,²⁸ but it has been held that there is no duty to keep a lookout for persons on or near the track, at points other than crossings, in places where the streetcar tracks do not constitute part of a street.²⁹ Where a street railway company permits a public use of its tracks at a particular place for a long period of time, it is the duty of its motormen to keep a constant lookout ahead so as to avoid injuries to persons at such point.³⁰

Sufficiency of lookout. In the exercise of his duty to use reasonable and ordinary care to discover persons on or near the track the motorman is required to keep a vigilant,³¹ sharp,³² or careful³³ lookout. The motorman is not only required to keep a constant lookout for persons on the track,³⁴ but he must also keep a diligent lookout to avoid injury to one who may be in dangerous proximity to the track;³⁵ and it has been held that the operator of a streetcar must maintain a vigilant watch³⁶ or a constant and careful lookout³⁷ for persons who may be approaching the track. Under the so-called vigilant watch ordinances motormen may be required to maintain a vigilant watch for persons on, near, or approaching the track.³⁸ In addition to his duty to maintain a vigilant, careful, or sharp lookout, the motorman may be required to maintain such a lookout as would enable him to see the first appearance of danger to a person on or near the track,³⁹ but the company will not be liable for the failure of the motorman to maintain such a lookout, unless the danger appeared soon enough to enable him to use means to avert the danger.⁴⁰

While it is the duty of the operator of a car to discover all discoverable persons who are in front of his car⁴¹ or in close proximity thereto,⁴² the duty of discovery is not absolute,⁴³ and it is not the duty of a motorman to leave his car and make a personal inspection of the fender to see that no one has attached himself thereto.⁴⁴ Although it is the motorman's duty to look along the whole line of the street to guard against collision with anyone likely to come in the way of the car,⁴⁵ the motorman is not required at each instant to have his eyes focussed on every object, on each side of the track, as well as on everything in front,⁴⁶ and he is not required to look in any one place all the time, so as to discover persons who may be on or near the track.⁴⁷ The operator of a streetcar is not guilty of negligence merely because he omits to keep a lookout at each side of the car to the rear of the front platform to prevent injury to persons coming laterally into collision with the side of the car,⁴⁸ unless the circumstances are such as to require such precaution.⁴⁹ Where the operator of the streetcar is not so stationed that he can observe the track, the company must provide a lookout at a place where the track may be observed and the result of the observation immediately communicated to the operator.⁵⁰

Compliance of equipment with law as not absolving from duty. Despite the fact that the equipment of a streetcar,⁵¹ such as a headlight,⁵² is in compliance with the law, the operator is nevertheless required to keep a vigilant lookout.⁵³

Whether person on or near track is prone or erect. The motorman is bound to keep a lookout for a person who is prone upon the track as well as one who is erect.⁵⁴

Conductor. It is not the duty of the conductor on a streetcar to keep a lookout for pedestrians.⁵⁵

b. Signals and Other Warnings

of the car to persons who may be on or near the track when the circumstances are such as to require such warning.

A person operating a streetcar is under a duty to give an adequate and timely warning of the approach of the car to persons who may be on or near the track when the circumstances are such as to require such warning.⁵⁶ Thus, it is the duty of streetcar operators to give warning of the approach of their cars to persons who may be dangerously near the cars,⁵⁷ and especially to persons who may not be aware of their presence,⁵⁸ as where a car is being run on a track in a direction opposite to that in which such cars are customarily run,⁵⁹ whether or not required by ordinance to give such warning.⁶⁰ Where a streetcar has been stopped at an unusual and dangerous place,⁶¹ and whenever a car of a street railway company is rapidly approaching a point in the highway where existing conditions render it apparent that the danger of injury to persons on or near the track will be materially lessened by sounding a warning,⁶² it is the legal duty of the company and its motormen to sound such warning, and failure to do so is negligence.

It has been held that it is clearly as much the duty to make this effort to minimize or avoid danger at any place on the highway as at street crossings.⁶³ On the other hand, it has been held that, as to persons who may be on or near its tracks, a street railroad company owes no duty constantly to ring its car bells from one end of the route to the other,⁶⁴

and that a streetcar company is not ordinarily under a duty to such persons to have its cars sound a warning while running between intersecting streets or within a street block,⁶⁵ particularly in the daytime,⁶⁶ and where the motorman has no reason to anticipate the necessity of giving warning to anyone.⁶⁷ In the absence of an ordinance requiring that a signal be given at a certain point, the rule of ordinary care must be applied,⁶⁸ and there is no want of due care toward a pedestrian, who may be near the track, if no signal is given, where the pedestrian is at a place requiring no signal.⁶⁹

Under particular circumstances, the sounding of a warning may be unnecessary, as where the person on or near the track has actual knowledge of the approach of the car,⁷⁰ since the only purpose of sounding the gong or other warning is to attract attention and give warning that the car is approaching.⁷¹ Therefore, a failure to sound a warning under such circumstances does not constitute negligence.⁷²

§ 249. Rate of Speed and Control of Car

A street railroad company has the duty, toward persons who may be on or near its track, to operate its cars at a reasonable rate of speed.

A street railroad company has the duty, toward persons who may be on or near the track, to operate its cars at a reasonable rate of speed.⁷³ What amounts to an excessive rate of speed, so as to constitute negligence toward a person who is on or near the track, may vary with the circumstances.⁷⁴ Although the speed at which a streetcar is moving is not necessarily excessive,⁷⁵ and even though the excessive speed at which a streetcar is run, at the time of causing a personal injury to one on or near its tracks, may not of itself be sufficient to create any liability,⁷⁶ as in a case where there is no particular relation between the speed of the car and the injury sustained,⁷⁷ the speed may be a circumstance tending to increase the danger of injury to one on or near the track. Under general rules, the operation of a streetcar at a rate of speed exceeding that fixed by ordinance may constitute negligence as to persons injured while on or near the tracks, as a proximate result of such excessive speed.⁷⁸

Control of car. Persons operating streetcars, particularly in thickly populated parts of a city,⁷⁹ should exercise ordinary care to keep their cars under control,⁸⁰ or at such speed and under such control that if persons are on or dangerously near the track the car may be stopped and injury averted.⁸¹ The fact that a driver of a streetcar had his head turned toward the car rather than the opposite direction in which the car was going is a circumstance indicating inattention and careless management on his part.⁸²

Reducing speed and stopping car. Although a motorman may ordinarily assume that an adult person who is on or dangerously near the track ahead of the car will move out of the way before the car reaches him, the motorman may, under certain circumstances, be required to slow down or stop the car when a person is seen, or should be seen, on or near the track, as discussed infra 251. Failure to use reasonable care to check⁸³ or stop⁸⁴ its cars at a highway crossing may subject the company to liability to a person who receives personal injuries while on or near the track at such a point. However, it is not the duty of the motorman to stop his car so as to avoid injury to persons who may come in contact with it unless as a man of ordinary prudence he has reason, or should have reason, to believe that his failure to stop the car will cause injury.⁸⁵ In crowded streets where there is danger of running over persons who, amid other diversions, may be more or less negligent of their own safety, it is the duty of the operator of a streetcar to have his car under control so that it may readily be stopped when the danger is found to be imminent.⁸⁶ Instead of coasting down a steep grade in a main thoroughfare with his brakes off, the operator of a streetcar should restrain his car within the lawful rate whether or not anyone can be seen on the track.⁸⁷ It has been held that the mere failure of a streetcar to stop at a point where there is a "stop" sign does not constitute negligence toward persons on or near the tracks.⁸⁸ The streetcar company is not liable where a pedestrian is injured when he moves so suddenly in front of the car, from a position of safety, that it is impossible for the motorman to stop in time to avoid an accident.⁸⁹

§ 250. Failure to Keep Lookout or to Perform Other Act as Wanton or Gross Negligence

The failure of the operator of a streetcar to keep a proper lookout so as to avoid injuries to persons on or near the track may, under particular circumstances, constitute gross negligence.

Failure of the operator of a streetcar to keep a proper lookout so as to avoid injuries to persons on or near the track may, under particular circumstances, constitute gross negligence.⁹⁰ Where the operator of a streetcar sees a pedestrian in imminent danger, and omits to do something which he may do to prevent or mitigate injury, knowing that injury will probably result from his omission,⁹¹ or runs the car at a dangerous speed and without warning signals at a point where he knows, or should know, that some person will probably be crossing and will thereby be exposed to injury, and the pedestrian is injured,⁹² the company may be liable for wanton injury.

§ 251. Precautions as to Persons Who Are, or Should Be, Seen on or near Track

- a. In general
- b. Reliance on due care by pedestrian
- c. Control of car; slackening speed and stopping

a. In General

The measure of a motorman's duty toward a person seen on or near the track is that required of a reasonably prudent and skillful man under the same circumstances.

Generally the measure of the motorman's duty toward a person seen on or near the track is that required of a reasonably prudent and skillful man under the same circumstances,⁹³ and, where he uses reasonable care to avoid striking such persons, the railway company is not liable.⁹⁴ If there exists an increase of danger by reason of the particular circumstances, an increase of diligence commensurate with the danger is required.⁹⁵ A motorman is not ordinarily required to take steps to avoid injuring a person seen on or near the track until the motorman discovers,⁹⁶ or until it becomes reasonably apparent to him,⁹⁷ that such a person is not going to get out of the way.

It is the duty of the operator of a streetcar to make an intelligent use of his senses to ascertain whether persons seen on or near the tracks are in peril,⁹⁸ and, after having made this discovery,⁹⁹ or where by the exercise of reasonable care such discovery can be made,¹ it at once² becomes the duty of the motorman to use proper means,³ or all means in his power,⁴ or to use all reasonable care and diligence,⁵ or to use every possible effort,⁶ or to exercise all the reasonable care and watchfulness that under the conditions prudence demands,⁷ or to exercise ordinary care,⁸ or to do everything that a reasonably careful and prudent man would do,⁹ under the same circumstances,¹⁰ consistent with the safety of himself,¹¹ and of his passengers,¹² to avoid striking such person; and, if he fails to perform this duty and injury results therefrom, he is guilty of negligence.¹³ Thus, it is the duty of the motorman to use reasonable diligence to avoid striking a pedestrian walking on the track,¹⁴ but no duty arises until it becomes reasonably apparent to the motorman that the pedestrian will probably not step off the track.¹⁵

Whether the motorman is in the exercise of due care in a particular case will depend on what he should, in the exercise of reasonable care, have known, rather than on his actual knowledge.¹⁶ However, where the motorman, in the exercise of the care required of him, on discovering the person in a perilous position does all he can to avert injury,¹⁷ or where there is nothing which the operator of the car could do to avert an accident,¹⁸ he is not negligent, and the company is not liable, and it has been held that, if the motorman, after he sees, or by the exercise of reasonable care could have seen, the person on or near the track in a position of danger, does all that a reasonably careful and prudent man would do under like circumstances to prevent an accident, the company is not liable.¹⁹

Duty to give warning. It is the duty of those in charge of a streetcar, on observing a person on or approaching the track under circumstances indicating the probability of danger to him from the progress of the car, to give warning of its approach.²⁰ This duty, however, does not arise where the danger is not apparent by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the motorman or other employee.²¹ If the motorman could not by the exercise of ordinary care prevent an accident to a person seen in a perilous position on or near the track by sounding a warning, the motorman is not negligent, and the company is not liable;²² and, where the motorman has given a proper warning and is not otherwise negligent, the company is not liable.²³

The negligence of a pedestrian in entering on a streetcar track in front of an approaching car does not relieve the motorman of his obligation to sound a gong after seeing the pedestrian, in a dangerous position, on the track.²⁴

b. Reliance on Due Care by Pedestrian

A motorman has the right to assume, until the contrary appears, that a person seen on or near the track will act with ordinary care.

Where the driver or motorman of a streetcar sees a person on, near, or approaching the track in advance of his car, he ordinarily has a right, in operating his car, to act on the assumption that such person is in full possession of all his faculties²⁵ and of his senses,²⁶ and that he will exercise them.²⁷ Thus, the motorman may properly assume that a person seen on or approaching the track will look²⁸ and see²⁹ or hear,³⁰ and, until the contrary is manifest,³¹ will be aware of,³² the approaching car, or that he will hear and heed the bell or gong when sounded.³³ The motorman has a right to presume, until the contrary appears,³⁴ that a person seen on or near the track ahead will act with ordinary care,³⁵ or will act as a reasonably prudent person,³⁶ under all the circumstances,³⁷ to avoid being injured, or, as otherwise stated, up to a certain point, to be measured by the facts of the particular case, the motorman has a right to assume that a pedestrian is exercising, and will continue to exercise, due care.³⁸ On the other hand, the motorman's right to rely on the presumption that a person seen on or near the track is not in danger does not relieve the motorman from his duty to exercise proper care under the particular circumstances.³⁹

In the absence of any signs of obliviousness on the part of a person in a dangerous position on or near the track,⁴⁰ if a person who is apparently capable of taking care of himself is seen on the track,⁴¹ the motorman has a right to presume that such person, in the exercise of reasonable care for his own safety, will get off or stay off the track until the car passes.⁴² Thus, if the distance is sufficient for a crossing to be made safely, the motorman has the right to assume that the pedestrian will so cross;⁴³ if the distance is insufficient, he has a right to assume that the pedestrian will maintain a position of safety at the side of the track⁴⁴ or stop before attempting to cross.⁴⁵ The motorman may properly indulge such presumption up until the time the person's danger becomes imminent,⁴⁶ or until it is apparent, or by the exercise of diligence would be apparent to the motorman, that the person is in danger, and is not aware of the danger, or is so situated that he cannot avoid the danger,⁴⁷ but not beyond that time.⁴⁸

parent safety will not be injured,⁴⁹ and he is not bound to anticipate that the pedestrian will place himself in a position of danger.⁵⁰ Hence, the motorman is not bound to assume that a pedestrian will run so near to a track,⁵¹ or will suddenly⁵² attempt to cross it⁵³ immediately in front of the car,⁵⁴ or in such a way as to be struck by the forward corner of the car nearest to him,⁵⁵ or at a point on the track where it would be impossible to avoid an accident.⁵⁶

The motorman has a right to assume that persons seen on, near, or approaching the track will not place themselves in a position of danger,⁵⁷ and the person in charge of a car with a clear track before him has a right to assume,⁵⁸ until a different intention is apparent,⁵⁹ that persons approaching the track will use due care to protect themselves, and will not suddenly undertake to cross in front of the car.⁶⁰ However, this rule is not applicable if from all the circumstances the motorman should see that the pedestrian is caught in a trap from which he cannot extricate himself.⁶¹

Under vigilant watch ordinance. Under an ordinance requiring a motorman to maintain a vigilant

watch so as to avoid injuries to persons on or near the track, the motorman is required to anticipate that those approaching the track will come within the danger zone⁶² and that those within it will not seasonably leave it.⁶³

On giving warning. A motorman need not anticipate that a man in a place of safety near the track will, in spite of warning, cross the track in front of the car at a time when it is too late to save him.⁶⁴ At any rate, on giving such warning to a person who is seen on, near, or approaching the track, the motorman may assume,⁶⁵ unless he knows, or has some good reason to believe, that the person who is on or dangerously near the track is deaf,⁶⁶ that such person hears the warning⁶⁷ and will stay out of the way⁶⁸ or will get out of the way⁶⁹ of the danger. While the motorman may in a particular case be justified in relying on this assumption until it may be too late to avoid contact,⁷⁰ the assumption cannot be indulged beyond the time when the person's danger becomes imminent.⁷¹

is not required to anticipate that a pedestrian would step on the track in front of an oncoming car,⁷² particularly where the car is so close that only its near corner would strike him.⁷³

Persons waiting to board car; parallel tracks. A motorman has no reason to anticipate that persons standing alongside the track in order to board the streetcar will stand so near to the track as to be struck by the running board on the side of the streetcar,⁷⁴ but on the contrary the motorman can reasonably assume that such persons are not in a place of danger.⁷⁵ However, there may be negligence where the car strikes persons standing on the track waiting to board a car on parallel tracks.⁷⁶ The motorman of a streetcar is not bound to anticipate that a pedestrian, in crossing the track ahead toward a parallel track, will, in order to avoid being struck by a car coming toward him in the opposite direction on the parallel track, retrace his footsteps;⁷⁷ on the contrary the motorman may properly assume that such a pedestrian, after having crossed over the first track, will continue in the same direction in which he is going instead of stepping back on the track which he has crossed,⁷⁸ and that, if there is any danger of his being struck with a car coming in the opposite direction on the other track, he will remain in the space between the parallel tracks⁷⁹ when that space is sufficient.⁸⁰ Until the contrary appears,⁸¹ the motorman of a car being run on one of two parallel tracks in a direction opposite to that in which cars on the same track are customarily run must assume that a pedestrian on the track is not aware that a car is approaching him from the wrong direction.⁸²

Pedestrian's changing position. Where the motorman of a streetcar observes that persons walking on a sidewalk alongside the track have changed their relative positions in a manner which would permit the car to pass without striking them, the motorman has a right to assume that such pedestrians see the car coming and are preparing to be out of its way when it reaches them.⁸³

Ordinarily, a motorman need not stop or slacken his speed on seeing a person on or near the track.

In view of the right of a motorman to assume that a person who is on, near, or approaching the track will ordinarily get out of the way or remain out of the way of an approaching car, as discussed supra subdivision b of this section, the motorman, on seeing a person so situated, is, ordinarily, under no duty to stop⁸⁴ or to slow down⁸⁵ until it becomes evident to a person of ordinary and reasonable care and prudence that the pedestrian has placed, or is about to place, himself in a perilous situation, or until the motorman becomes aware that the person in danger does not know of the approach of the car,⁸⁶ and is heedless of the danger,⁸⁷ or is unable to get out of the way of the car,⁸⁸ or does not intend to get out of the way.⁸⁹ In other words, since the motorman is not entitled to presume that persons seen on or near the track will get off or stay off until the car passes, beyond the time that the danger to such persons becomes imminent, the motorman, after reaching a point at which the pedestrian is in danger, must keep the car under control.⁹⁰ Therefore, as soon as any of the facts heretofore stated becomes apparent to the motorman,⁹¹ then the law charges him with the duty of using proper means to avoid injury, such as sounding a warning of the approach of the car, and, if that is not effective,⁹² it becomes the duty of the motorman, if necessary,⁹³ to put his car under control,⁹⁴ or to have the car under such control that he can stop it,⁹⁵ or at least to lessen its speed,⁹⁶ until he has good reason to believe that the person in a position of peril is aware of the approach of the car, and, if necessary, in such a situation, the motorman may be required to stop his car⁹⁷ if he can do so⁹⁸ without endangering his passengers.⁹⁹

A failure to stop may, under certain circumstances, constitute negligence¹ for which the company is liable.² However, as to persons seen in a dangerous position on or near the track, if the motorman on seeing such person does all he can to stop the car, or if on discovery of the danger of the person on or near the track it is impossible to stop the car in time to avert an accident, there is no negligence on the part of the motorman, and the street railroad company is not liable for the resulting injuries.³ A motorman is not negligent in failing to stop his car which struck a pedestrian where there is nothing to put the motorman on notice that such pedestrian is in a dangerous situation.⁴

A motorman of a streetcar running down a steep grade on a main thoroughfare, instead of coasting down such a grade with his brakes off, should reduce the speed of his car when he sees a person about to cross the track,⁵ particularly where the person would have ample time to cross safely if the speed of the car were not greater than the law permitted.⁶

Where person is attempting rescue. Where the motorman of a streetcar may see that a person crossing in front of his car is attempting to rescue a child from in front of an approaching car on a parallel track and that the rescuer may be imperiled by reason of the movement of both cars, it is the motorman's duty to stop the car.⁷

Current of air set up by movement of car. Since the fact that a moving car will set up a current of air is a matter of common knowledge,⁸ the motorman of a streetcar may properly assume that a person alongside the track will know of it,⁹ and the fact that a part of the clothing of a pedestrian is blown by such current toward a passing car resulting in injury to the pedestrian does not indicate that the car is moving at an unreasonable rate of speed¹⁰ so as to render the company guilty of negligence.¹¹

Under vigilant watch ordinance. Under a so-called vigilant watch ordinance, operators of streetcars are required on the first appearance of danger to pedestrians either on the track or moving toward it to stop such cars in the shortest time and space possible.¹² Under such an ordinance it is the duty of the motorman to give diligent heed to such persons, their appearance, conduct, etc., to ascertain whether such persons are in a dangerous position¹³ and whether or not they are conscious of the approaching car.¹⁴

As to persons approaching track. In pursuance of rules heretofore stated, ordinarily the motorman is under no obligation to stop his car¹⁵ or to slacken its speed¹⁶ merely because he sees a pedestrian approaching the track, particularly after the motorman has given proper and sufficient warning of the approach of the car,¹⁷ unless it appears that to proceed will be likely to result in injury to the person approaching the track,¹⁸ or unless the motorman discovers, or until it becomes reasonably apparent to him, that the person approaching the track is in a position of apparent danger,¹⁹ or that the car is going to strike such person,²⁰ or that such person is not going to get out of the way,²¹ or until the motorman sees, or in the exercise of ordinary care could see, that the approaching pedestrian is not going to stop before he gets into a position of peril.²²

On seeing that the person approaching the track is in a position of apparent danger, it becomes the duty of the motorman, on an approaching car, to stop the car if necessary to avoid striking the person.²³ Thus, it is negligence for the operator of a streetcar not to stop the car as soon as he may reasonably do so, after it becomes apparent that a pedestrian approaching the track intends to cross it ahead of the car,²⁴ particularly where the pedestrian could have safely crossed unless the car had been run at an unusual rate of speed.²⁵ At any rate, it is the duty of the motorman, when he discovers or should have discovered the peril of a person approaching the track, to slacken the speed of the car.²⁶

On the other hand, where the motorman does all he can to stop the car after discovering the peril of a pedestrian on the track,²⁷ or where on discovery of the person's peril it is too late to stop,²⁸ or if the motorman could not by the exercise of ordinary care prevent the accident by stopping the car²⁹ or by checking or slackening its speed³⁰ after he saw, or, in the exercise of ordinary care, could have seen, that such pedestrian was not going to stop before he got into a perilous position, the motorman is not negligent and the company is not liable.

On discovery of unknown object on track. Where the motorman of a streetcar discovers an unknown object on the track ahead and has no reason to suppose it is a human being, the motorman is not under a duty immediately to stop his car.³¹

§ 252. Duty at or Approaching Street Crossings

It is the duty of the motorman or operator of a streetcar, approaching a public street crossing, to exercise reasonable and ordinary care under the circumstances to avoid injuring persons who may be on, near, or approaching the crossing.

While those operating streetcars are obliged at all times to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuries to persons on or near the track, as discussed supra § 251, the requirement of reasonable care imposes on such operators the duty of a more exacting attention when they approach street crossings,³² particularly in a crowded city where pedestrians

may always be expected to be in front of the cars,³³ and, when they are in danger³⁴ or going into danger,³⁵ to use every effort,³⁶ consistent with the safety of the passengers,³⁷ to avoid injuring such persons. Therefore it may be said that generally it is the duty of the motorman or driver of a streetcar, approaching a public street crossing, to exercise reasonable and ordinary care under the circumstances to avoid injuring persons who may be on, near, or approaching such crossing.³⁸ Thus, in approaching and crossing a public street it is the duty of the motorman to keep his car under reasonable control,³⁹ to keep a lookout,⁴⁰ to sound a warning,⁴¹ and to run at a reasonable rate of speed.⁴² Under particular circumstances it may be the duty of the operator of a streetcar to stop the car before crossing a street intersection so as to avoid injury to persons who may be on or near the track at that point;⁴³ and, in the performance of his duty to keep his car under control and to keep a lookout, he must have regard for the peculiar features of the apparent situation confronting him.⁴⁴ A motorman, however, is not required to stop in anticipation that a pedestrian who is crossing the track at a street crossing, and has time to cross the track before the car reaches him, may stop, or turn around on the track, and consequently may be run down.⁴⁵ Under a vigilant watch ordinance the motorman may be required to keep a vigilant watch at or approaching street crossings and to check the speed of his car or to stop on first appearance of danger.⁴⁶

In the absence of a statute or ordinance imposing a duty on a streetcar motorman to sound a gong or bell at a street crossing, it has been held that failure to do so becomes negligence only when the circumstances render the ringing of the bell or gong necessary;⁴⁷ and the failure of a streetcar motorman to sound his gong on approaching a street crossing is immaterial where the injured person saw the approaching car before stepping on the track.⁴⁸ Similarly the failure to stop or give a warning to persons at street crossings is unnecessary when such persons are standing in places which require no warnings.⁴⁹

A failure to exercise proper care at a street crossing resulting in injuries to persons on or near the track is negligence for which the company is liable.⁵⁰ Ordinarily it is negligence, for which the company is liable, for the motorman of a streetcar to run his car at a rapid rate of speed⁵¹ or to fail to give a proper warning⁵² when running past a street crossing at which a car, bound in the opposite direction, is discharging passengers.

Where view of crossing is obstructed. When the view at a street crossing is clear and unobstructed, the degree of vigilance required of the street railroad company and those operating its cars to avoid injuries to persons on or near the track is not as great as when the view is obstructed,⁵³ and the effect of an obstruction is to impose on the railway company the reciprocal duty of using special precautions to avoid an accident, depending on the particular location and circumstances.⁵⁴ Hence, it is particularly negligent for a motorman to run his car at a high rate of speed to a crossing where pedestrians are likely to be when his view of the crossing is so obstructed by a passing vehicle that he cannot see whether or not the crossing is clear.⁵⁵

Crossing intersection without signal. Where an ordinance prohibits the operator of a streetcar from crossing a particular street intersection until signaled to do so by a traffic officer, it is negligence for the streetcar to cross the intersection without such signal.⁵⁶

§ 253. Approaching or Passing Other Cars or Vehicles

One operating a streetcar is not ordinarily bound to anticipate that pedestrians will step from behind cars or other vehicles near the track into the path of the approaching car; but, where such occurrence is likely, as where another car bound in the opposite direction is receiving or discharging passengers, it is his duty to operate his car accordingly.

Persons operating streetcars are not required to anticipate that pedestrians will step from behind cars or other vehicles near the track into the path of an approaching car,⁵⁷ but are held to the same degree of care as is required to avoid mishaps to pedestrians intending to cross a highway between or at crossings.⁵⁸ Thus, operators of streetcars traveling on a public highway between street crossings are not bound to anticipate that persons will step into the path of a car, from behind busses loading or unloading passengers,⁵⁹ from behind a motor vehicle parked near the track,⁶⁰ from behind trucks going in the same direction but in advance of the car,⁶¹ from behind a standing wagon,⁶² from behind cars approaching on a parallel track,⁶³ or from between wagons moving alongside the track.⁶⁴

If, however, the operator of a streetcar has reason to anticipate such an occurrence, as where the other car, bound in the opposite direction, is at a crossing or other point discharging⁶⁵ or receiving⁶⁶ passengers, or where a motorman can see another car approaching from the opposite direction on a parallel track and has reason to anticipate that such car will stop to discharge passengers,⁶⁷ particularly where the street is crowded with vehicles,⁶⁸ it is his duty to take such circumstances into consideration, and to operate his car accordingly, as by keeping a sharp⁶⁹ or careful⁷⁰ lookout,⁷¹ by running at a reasonable rate of speed,⁷² by giving a warning,⁷³ by keeping the car under control,⁷⁴ or under such control that it may be stopped at a moment's notice⁷⁵ or on the appearance of danger,⁷⁶ by reducing the speed of the car,⁷⁷ and, if necessary, stopping it,⁷⁸ so that persons who may have alighted from the standing car may cross the track safely.⁷⁹

The fact that the car which is about to be passed on a parallel track has not yet reached its stopping place and is moving slowly does not relieve the motorman of the passing car of his duty to keep a lookout for persons who may pass behind the slowly moving car, and to keep his own car under control.⁸⁰ Where a person has alighted in a safe place provided for the purpose, and, after the car from which he has alighted has proceeded for some distance, the person starts across the track into the path of an oncoming car on the other track, it is sufficient that the motorman of such car have it under such control that it can be stopped at a moment's notice, that he give the usual signals of the approach of the car, that he keep a lookout ahead, and that he exercise ordinary care to prevent injuries to persons on or so near the track as to endanger their safety.⁸¹

Rules of company. The rules of a street railway company may recognize the danger of running a car past a regular stopping place, where a car traveling in an opposite direction has stopped, at a rate of speed which will not permit an almost instantaneous stopping of such car,⁸² and while it has been held that a rule of the street railroad company, that a car on a double track passing another standing still should be under full control, that is, that the passing car should be run slowly enough to permit its being stopped within a few feet, is but a rule of law applicable to the same situation,⁸³ it has also been held that the violation of a self-imposed rule of a streetcar company requiring the motorman to come to a stop before passing a standing car on a parallel track resulting in an injury to a pedestrian is not negligence per se.⁸⁴ However, in determining whether a motorman was in the exercise of ordinary care in passing a standing streetcar without sounding a gong, a rule of the street railroad company requiring that in passing standing cars the bell must be rung and the car must be under complete control may be considered.⁸⁵

Determining status of injured person unnecessary. It is not necessary to determine the question whether a person who is injured by the passing car after being discharged from the standing car has ceased his relation as a passenger at the time he is struck,⁸⁶ because, where he is struck while on a street crossing, his rights as a mere traveler on the street entitle him to an observance on the part of defendant of the rule requiring the exercise of reasonable care for his safety.⁸⁷

First appearance of danger. Under an ordinance requiring the motorman to stop his car on the first appearance of danger, where a pedestrian stepped from between wagons alongside the track, the first appearance of danger was when the pedestrian emerged from behind the wagon and stepped on the track immediately in front of the car.⁸⁸

§ 254. Rounding Curves

A motorman may assume that a person within the swing of the overhang of the car at a curve will draw back far enough to avoid injury, and he ordinarily need not keep a lookout or give a warning to prevent injury from the overhang of the car on a curve.

The operator of a streetcar on rounding a curve or turning a corner must use such care as the condition of the streets and the traffic require.⁸⁹ In the absence of any defect in a streetcar or its equipment,⁹⁰ since it has been held that the motorman of a streetcar is not charged with knowledge that a

Traffic signal

A streetcar starting a turn at an intersection controlled by traffic signals at a time when it had a green signal could continue until it completed the crossing.—Keller v. N. C. Public Service, 138 So. 463, 18 La. App. 317.

pedestrian standing near the track is within the swing of the rear end of the car as it rounds a curve at that point,⁹¹ or at any rate since the motorman may rightfully assume that a person within the swing of the rear overhang of the car at a curve will draw back far enough to avoid being struck,⁹² it has been held that the streetcar company is not negligent, and is not liable for injuries to a pedestrian who is struck by the rear end of a streetcar as it rounds a curve,⁹³ particularly where the person near the track has misjudged the distance of the overhang and has ample space within which to retreat to a safe area.⁹⁴ The rule that the company is not ordinarily liable has been held inapplicable unless the injured pedestrian has freely and voluntarily placed himself in a position of peril,⁹⁵ and special circumstances may impose special obligations on the operator of a car rounding a curve.⁹⁶ It has also been held that the motorman may not assume that a pedestrian near a curve knows of his danger from the overhang of the car,⁹⁷ particularly where the overhang of the car is unusual,⁹⁸ and it has been held that the company may be liable for injuries sustained by the pedestrian under such circumstances.⁹⁹

While it has been held that the streetcar company only owes a duty of reasonable care to avoid injury to a pedestrian on a sidewalk where the overhang of a streetcar overlaps the sidewalk,¹ it has also been held that a railway company is required to use proportionate care where the overhang sweeps a special loading place provided by the railway company and impliedly held out for use by the public as a safe place.²

Lookout. While under some circumstances the motorman of a streetcar going around a corner may be required to keep a sharp lookout,³ street railroads are ordinarily under no duty to keep a lookout for persons who may be injured by the swing or overhang as a car rounds a curve,⁴ and it has been held that the motorman is not under a duty to keep watch of the overhang zone until the rear of the car has cleared it;⁵ but a lookout may be required under circumstances of danger, as where it is unusual for a car to make a turn at such place.⁶

Warning. The operator of a streetcar has been held to be under no duty to warn pedestrians of the swing or overhang as the car rounds a curve,⁷ particularly where such pedestrians have freely and voluntarily placed themselves in a position of

Safety zone

(1) A motorman, whose interurban car struck pedestrian in safety zone, was charged with knowledge of the extent that outswing of rear end of car going around curve would encroach on safety zone, and with knowledge that automobile traffic which started immediately before the car moved would cut off possibility of pedestrian proceeding further across the street.—Elder v. Rutledge, 27 N. E.2d 358, 217 Ind. 459.

(2) A safety zone established in street by municipal authorities under traffic code is place designed for pedestrians to be safe from collision with vehicular traffic, and not as place of safety from normal overhang of streetcar, either on straight track, or as car rounds a curve.—Ferguson v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 156 P.2d 869, 159 Kan. 520.

(3) Where pedestrian started to cross street and stopped near safety zone when lights changed and driver of electric bus, in obedience to traffic signals and hand signal of traffic officer, proceeded to make turn, following streetcar track around turn, street railroad was not liable for injuries sustained by pedestrian struck by side of the bus due to the inward swing of the overhang at the middle of bus in negotiating the curve.—*Miller v. peril.⁸ However, it has also been held that the motorman should sound a warning so as to avoid injury to a person who is in danger from the overhang of a car while making a turn,⁹ and the warning is required particularly where the injured pedestrian has not freely and voluntarily placed himself in the perilous position,¹⁰ or where the injured person is standing in a safety zone.¹¹

Rate of speed; starting and stopping car. While under some circumstances the motorman of a streetcar may be required to proceed around a curve cautiously,¹² the mere fact that a streetcar rounds a curve at high speed does not constitute negligence toward a person near the track who is struck by the overhang of the car.¹³ There arises a duty to stop the car if the operator sees a pedestrian in a place of danger near a curve and apparently unaware of his peril,¹⁴ and, where the car has come to a stop before reaching the curve, the motorman has a duty not to start around the curve at a time when to do so would cause pedestrians to be struck by the overhang of the car.¹⁵ The motorman has been held negligent if he approaches the curve in such a manner as to indicate an intention to stop, and there increases his speed without warning so that persons near the track cannot extricate themselves from the danger in time to avoid injury from the overhang of the car,¹⁶ but it has also been held that the motorman is not negligent toward pedestrians who are struck by the overhang of the car in rounding a curve under such circumstances.¹⁷

§ 255. Persons Working on or near Tracks

The operator of a streetcar must exercise due care to avoid injury to persons whose employment or duty takes them into the street.

A streetcar motorman has the duty to exercise due care to avoid injury to persons whose employment or duty takes them into the street.¹⁸ Where workmen are engaged in operations on or close to street railroad tracks, the operator of a streetcar with knowledge of their presence must be watchful to avoid injuring them,¹⁹ and, if such workmen are injured as a result of the operator's failure to be watchful, the railroad company is liable.²⁰ The streetcar operator is not required to keep the same lookout at times when the workmen are not actively engaged in such operations,²¹ and is not liable for injury to a workman who is struck while standing near the track and who the motorman had no reason to suppose would be standing where he was,²² as where his duties did not necessarily require him to be there.²³ The street railroad company is not liable for personal injuries inflicted on men working near its tracks where the company is not guilty of negligence toward such workmen,²⁴ but a flagman's signal to proceed does not relieve the motorman of the duty of exercising due care.²⁵

Duty to sound warning. A street railway company cannot recklessly run its cars at a speed to exceed the limits of the law, and without ringing a bell, or sounding a gong, irrespective of the employment of a person on or near the track,²⁶ and it

Warning of danger

Motorman of streetcar, who had received flagman's signal to proceed over portion of track being repaired, was required to exercise a greater degree of care for protection of workmen than for protection of pedestrians, after workman, who saw approaching streetcar, arose from a kneeling position and with both hands and by voice attempted to stop oncoming car.—Russo v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., supra.

26. U.S.—Puget Sound Traction, has been held that the company must give adequate and timely warning to persons working on or near the track,²⁷ and a failure to give such persons a proper warning constitutes negligence for which the company is liable.²⁸ On the other hand it has been held that there is no duty to warn the employee of a contractor doing work alongside the track and between intersecting streets.²⁹

Reliance on precautions or care of workmen. The motorman of a streetcar is not required to anticipate unexpected acts endangering workmen on or near the track,³⁰ and may assume that a workman will not increase his danger by a failure to exercise ordinary care in looking out for streetcars³¹ or by failing to get out of the way in time to avoid injury.³²

Duty to slow down or stop. While the motorman of a streetcar is not required to stop his car merely because he sees men at work on or near the track ahead,³³ such motorman may be required to slow down or to stop if necessary when danger to such persons becomes apparent.³⁴

§ 256. Persons on Private Premises near Tracks

Where a streetcar leaves its tracks and injures a person on private property, it has been held that the company is liable irrespective of negligence.

Although it has been held that, where a streetcar leaves its track and inflicts personal injuries on persons who are on private premises adjacent to the track, the company is liable irrespective of negligence,³⁵ recovery for such injuries has been denied where no negligence on the part of the company appeared.³⁶ Where, as a result of the operation of a street railroad, a person on private premises suffers merely fright, the company is not liable.³⁷

§ 257. Persons under Elevated Railroad

It is the duty of an elevated railroad to exercise reasonable care to prevent sparking and injury from sparks to persons under the railroad.

It is the duty of an elevated railroad to exercise reasonable care to prevent sparking³⁸ and injury from sparks to persons under the railroad.³⁹ It is bound to use the most approved means to prevent live coals from falling from its engines.⁴⁰ An elevated railroad owes persons lawfully in buildings adjacent to the streets only the duty of exercising ordinary care for their protection.⁴¹

6. INJURIES TO CHILDREN AND PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY

§ 258. Children

A street railroad company in operating its cars is bound to use ordinary care, and only ordinary care, to avoid injuring a child on or near its track, but greater caution is required to discharge this duty toward a child than toward an adult.

A street railroad company in operating its cars is bound to use ordinary care,⁴² and only ordinary care,⁴³ to avoid injuring a child who may be on or near the track. However, acts and conduct on the part of those in charge of a streetcar, consistent with ordinary care toward a man of full age, may amount to, and be, negligence toward a child.⁴⁴

Therefore, in an abstract proposition,⁴⁵ and as a general rule, greater caution on the part of a street railroad company in the operation of its cars is required toward a child than is required toward an adult.⁴⁶ Whether a streetcar company has exercised proper care and caution toward a child, who is injured by the operation of streetcar, while such child is on or near the tracks, depends on the circumstances of the particular case,⁴⁷ taking into consideration the age,⁴⁸ apparent maturity,⁴⁹ and capacity⁵⁰ of the child. If, in the absence of contributory negligence, by the exercise of proper care, injury to the child could have been avoided, the company is liable for the resulting injuries;⁵¹ but it is not liable where it is not negligent.⁵²

A street railroad company is not required to guard against unexpected or thoughtless acts of such a child, and, if it exercises reasonable and ordinary care in the operation of its cars to discover such child and uses all reasonable means within its power to avoid injury after discovering his peril, it is not liable for injuries which result from an unavoidable accident,⁵³ as where the child puts himself in such a position of danger that he cannot be discovered by reasonable care in time to prevent an accident.⁵⁴

Where presence of children may be anticipated. A motorman must exercise a high degree of care in places where he may reasonably anticipate the presence of children.⁵⁵

§ 259. — Duty to Anticipate Presence and Danger

A motorman is bound to anticipate the presence of children and to operate the car with due regard for their safety in places where children are likely to be found in the street.

In the operation of streetcars it is the duty of the streetcar company to recognize that children may from time to time be occupying and using the streets;⁵⁶ and a motorman is bound to anticipate their presence, to anticipate danger to them, and to operate his car with due regard for their safety in a populous neighborhood,⁵⁷ or in other places where children are likely to be found in the street.⁵⁸ While it is the duty of a motorman to use reasonable care under the circumstances of the case, he is not required to anticipate that a child will rush into danger merely because he sees such child in the street or on the sidewalk,⁵⁹ and the motorman is not required to anticipate that children seen near or approaching the track will attempt to cross in front of the approaching car⁶⁰ or will run into the car.⁶¹ Similarly, while it has been said that a motorman may as a reasonably prudent motorman be found to have been negligent in failing to anticipate that children would play in the street and might run in front of a moving car,⁶² it has been held that, as a matter of law, the motorman is not required to anticipate such possibilities,⁶³ and he is not bound to anticipate the presence of a child playing in material piled on the street.⁶⁴ Furthermore, on seeing children playing in the street, the motorman is not negligent in failing to anticipate that one of them will suddenly and unexpectedly run in front of the moving car.⁶⁵ Neither is a motorman required to anticipate that a child of very tender years will be wandering unattended at a busy intersection;⁶⁶ nor is the motorman required to anticipate that a child of tender years will break away from its caretaker and suddenly dart in front of the moving car.⁶⁷

§ 260. — Lookout and Warning; Speed and Control of Car

The operator of a streetcar must maintain a lookout to discover children who may be on or near the track. Where children are in the street, the motorman must operate his car at a reasonable rate of speed, and have it under such control as a reasonably prudent man would if placed in the same circumstances.

The operator of a streetcar must maintain a lookout to discover children who may be on or near the track,⁶⁸ and under some circumstances he may be required to exercise a more vigilant lookout for children than for adults.⁶⁹ Thus a driver or motorman, when operating his car on a street where he has reason to expect the presence of children, must exercise a high degree of watchfulness,⁷⁰ since the duty of a motorman to keep a lookout to discover the peril of persons who may be on or near the track, particularly in thickly populated parts of the city, is applicable to children.⁷¹ However, where there is nothing in a situation, as known to, and ordinarily observed by, the motorman which calls on him for extraordinary vigilance,⁷² it is ordinary, rather than extraordinary, vigilance that is required of him.⁷³ Thus the motorman may not be negligent in failing to see a small child on the sidewalk.⁷⁴

The operator of a streetcar must maintain a lookout to discover small children who may be lying on the track ahead of the car,⁷⁵ but a motorman cannot be considered careless, although he fails to see a child between crossings, if the car would not have struck such child in the exercise of reasonable care, provided some unusual event had not intervened between his beginning to cross the tracks and his being struck,⁷⁶ such as tripping and falling, or being caught in the rails or the pavement, or in some other manner having his progress impeded.⁷⁷ A streetcar motorman is not under a duty to be excessively diligent in the middle of a street block,⁷⁸ but it may be negligent for him to fail to apprehend the possibility of a child crossing in the middle of the block,⁷⁹ and to neglect to be vigilant about the likelihood of a child approaching from the curb as the car moves from crossing to crossing.⁸⁰

If by the exercise of ordinary care the motorman might have discovered the child in time to avoid injuring him, and failed to do so, the motorman is negligent, and the company is liable for injuries which may result therefrom,⁸¹ and, conversely, there is no liability where the motorman did not see the child and could not be expected to have seen him in the exercise of ordinary care.⁸²

Warning, speed, and control of car. There can be no hard and fast rule as to the exact rate of speed or degree of control to be exercised where children are in the street,⁸³ but there is a rule applicable in all cases that the motorman must operate his car at a reasonable rate of speed, and have it, under such control as a reasonably prudent man would if placed in the same circumstances.⁸⁴ The question of negligence must in each case be determined by the facts and circumstances as they existed at the time of the accident.⁸⁵ Whenever a car of a street railway company is rapidly approaching a point in the highway where existing conditions render it apparent that the danger of injury to the public will be materially lessened by the sounding of a warning, it is the legal duty of the company and its motormen to sound such warning toward a child who may be on or near the track, and the failure to do so is negligence.⁸⁶ Hence, whether the rate of speed and failure to sound a warning, or failure to sound a warning and to stop, constitutes negligence on the part of the motorman may depend on the circumstances of the particular case.⁸⁷ However, it has also been held that the operation of a streetcar at a rate of speed exceeding that permitted by ordinance may, when proximately resulting in injury to a child, constitute negligence per se.⁸⁸ If a carman knows a street crossing will be thronged with school children at a certain hour of the day, that fact ought to put him on notice of the danger of a fatality if he moves over the crossing at that hour without having his car under control.⁸⁹

§ 261. — Precautions as to Children Who Are Seen or Should Be Seen on or near or Approaching Track

A motorman who sees or should see a child in a dangerous position on, near, or approaching the track must use all reasonable efforts to avoid injuring the child, and he cannot ordinarily assume that the child will discern and avoid the peril.

A motorman, who while operating his car sees, or by the exercise of ordinary care could see, a child in a dangerous situation on, near, or approaching the track, must at once use all reasonable efforts to avoid injuring it;⁹⁰ he must proceed with caution and use ordinary care,⁹¹ and for a failure to exercise due care to avoid injury to a child seen on or near the track the company is liable.⁹² Where the motorman, on discovering, in the exercise of due care, the danger of a small child on, near, or approaching the track, does all that he can to avoid injury to the child, the company is not liable.⁹³

Child seen on or approaching track. Where a motorman sees or should see that a young child is in such a situation or is acting so as to expose itself to danger from an advancing car, of which it is unaware,⁹⁴ the motorman should take such measures as will prevent injury;⁹⁵ and, when a young child is discovered approaching the car track with the apparent intention of crossing in front of a moving car⁹⁶ or is discovered on the track,⁹⁷ or where a child of tender years is seen near the track,⁹⁸ it is the duty of the operator of the car to exercise a high degree of care to avoid injury to such child. It has been held that a motorman is not required, on seeing a child approaching the track, to make sure that the child will be off the track at the point where it is crossing when the car reaches it.⁹⁹

Reliance on precautions of child or of its custodian. Although the operator of a streetcar may, in the first instance, properly assume that an adult seen on or near the track will get off, or stay off, the track, as discussed supra § 251 b, where the motorman sees or could, in the exercise of reasonable care, see a child of tender years on or near the track¹ or in dangerous proximity to the track,² the motorman is not permitted to assume that the child will discern and avoid the perils of its situation. Therefore, if the motorman sees or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could see a child of tender years on or near the track, he is not ordinarily entitled to act on the assumption that such child will get off or stay off the track.³ However, it has been held that the motorman may properly rely on the natural inclination toward safety on the part of even young children;⁴ and it has also been held that the motorman may, in the first instance, presume that children on the track will get out of the way,⁵ particularly if such children are of such an age as to appreciate and avoid danger;⁶ and a motorman may assume that an adult person in charge of a child of tender years will not permit the child to come from a safe place into dangerous proximity to a moving car.⁷

Duty to sound warning, to control car, to slow up, and to stop. In pursuance of his duty to use all reasonable efforts to avoid injury to a child who is, or ought to be, seen on, near, or approaching the track, the motorman of a streetcar may be required, on seeing a child in such a situation, to sound a warning;⁸ to keep the car under control,⁹ particularly where the child seen on or dangerously near the track is of very tender years;¹⁰ to reduce the speed of the car,¹¹ and if necessary to stop,¹² if that can be done without endangering the passengers;¹³ or to use all reasonable means to stop it in time to avoid the injury.¹⁴ Under particular circumstances the motorman of a car may be required not to start his car while a child is in a dangerous place near the track.¹⁵

Where a motorman sees a child of tender years near the track and apparently intending to cross ahead of the car,¹⁶ or if the motorman sees a child approaching the track in time to stop,¹⁷ and the motorman fails to stop the car, he is negligent and the company is liable.¹⁸ However, it is not the duty of a motorman to stop his car, or to slacken its speed, whenever he sees a child in or near the street, unless there is some circumstance sufficient to warn a person of ordinary prudence that the child is or is likely to be endangered by the operation of the car,¹⁹ or unless, as a man of ordinary care and prudence, he has reason, or should have reason, to apprehend that his failure to do so will cause injury to a child seen approaching the track,²⁰ or unless it is reasonably apparent, or would be, to a reasonably cautious man that, unless the speed of the car is checked or stopped, it will strike the child.²¹ As otherwise stated, since no such duty arises until the motorman sees²² or, in the exercise of reasonable care, can see²³ that the child so situated is about,²⁴ or is likely,²⁵ to get into the path of the approaching car, a motorman is not required to slacken the speed, or to stop his car, merely because a small child²⁶ is seen in a safe place²⁷ on the sidewalk,²⁸ or in the street,²⁹ or on the curb,³⁰ or near the curb³¹ as the car approaches; and, where on seeing a child approach the track the motorman stops as soon as he can do so, he is not negligent.³²

Similarly, since a street railway company is not liable for inevitable accidents resulting from sudden and unexpected acts of children, as discussed supra § 258, the company is not liable where the child suddenly runs in front of or against a moving car before it can be stopped or its speed slackened, although every reasonable effort to do so is exercised.³³ However, in order to relieve the company of liability in such a case it is necessary that the car be operated at a reasonable rate of speed.³⁴

Under vigilant watch ordinance. Under the so-called vigilant watch ordinances a motorman is, on the first appearance of danger to children seen on or near, or approaching, required to stop within the shortest time and space possible, and failure to stop within such time and space, resulting in injuries to a child, constitutes negligence for which the company is liable.³⁵

§ 262. Infirm or Otherwise Disabled Persons

A street railway company must operate its cars with due regard to the rights of aged and infirm or otherwise disabled persons.

It is the duty of a street railway company to run its cars with due regard to the rights of aged and infirm persons,³⁶ and the company is liable if it does not use due and ordinary care, in proportion to the danger, to avoid injury to such persons³⁷ or persons otherwise disabled.³⁸ Thus, a streetcar motorman must be alert and watchful to avoid injury to those who, because of advanced age³⁹ or enfeebled physical condition,⁴⁰ do not get off the track at the near approach of the car. A higher degree of care must be exercised toward an adult person who, from any apparent disability or other cause, cannot be expected to exercise the usual degree of prudence and care for his own protection.⁴¹

While it has been held that the duty of a motor-man to keep a lookout for persons who may be on or near the track is applicable to persons who are disabled,⁴² such as those disabled by intoxication,⁴³ or otherwise,⁴⁴ it has been held that there is no duty of prevision owed to persons who may, because intoxicated⁴⁵ or for any other reason,⁴⁶ lie down in practical disguise on or near the track; but that as to such persons, the only duty of a streetcar company is to use reasonable care not to injure them after their peril has been discovered,⁴⁷ or would have been discovered by due care in the use of such facilities and equipment as were required by their duty, not to such persons, but to persons using the streets in some such way as was to be reasonably expected.⁴⁸

It has also been held that, if a human being is seen by the operator of a streetcar lying on the track, it is the operator's duty to exercise the very highest degree of care to avoid injury to the person in such position.⁴⁹ A motorman is not required to anticipate that a person will be thrown on the track.⁵⁰ Disregard by the motorman of a signal warning of danger may constitute negligence in striking a person disabled on the tracks.⁵¹ On discovering a person on or near the track the motorman may properly assume that such person is in full possession of his faculties, as discussed supra § 251 b even though they may subsequently prove to be impaired,⁵² but the motorman is not entitled to presume that a person who is on or dangerously near the track and apparently insensible of his danger, by reason of intoxication,⁵³ or sleepiness,⁵⁴ or any other like cause,⁵⁵ will stay or remain out of danger. In any event a street railway company is not liable for injuries to disabled persons where it is impossible to stop the car in time to prevent injuring them after their perilous position is observed.⁵⁶

Error of judgment in emergency situation. In an emergency situation a motorman's error in judgment, when he acts with respect to a disabled person on the track, does not constitute negligence.⁵⁷

7. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

§ 263. In General

Generally it is the duty of one going on or near street railroad tracks to exercise reasonable and ordinary care to protect himself from injury, and, if he fails to do so, he is guilty of contributory negligence, which ordinarily is a defense and precludes the recovery of damages.

As a general rule it is the duty of a person going on or near a street railroad track to exercise such reasonable and ordinary care as would be exercised by a reasonably prudent person, under the same or similar circumstances, to protect himself from injury;⁵⁸ and, if he fails to exercise such care, whereby he is injured, he is guilty of contributory negligence.⁵⁹ In order to constitute ordinary care, the care exercised must be proportionate to the known⁶⁰

danger;⁶¹ and, if a person is familiar with the track and the conditions relative to the running of cars, he must avail himself of his knowledge in exercising ordinary care.⁶² However, a person need not exercise extraordinary care, prudence, or foresight,⁶³ or take special precautions against unknown or unusual dangers.⁶⁴

The right of a person to recover, notwithstanding contributory negligence, where the company willfully, wantonly, or recklessly causes the death or injury, is discussed supra § 211. Comparative negligence statutes are discussed with respect to street railroads in Negligence §§ 169-173.

Rescue of property. It is not contributory negli-

Effect generally. Negligence on the part of a person sustaining death or injury, or on the part of another person for whose negligence he is responsible, is ordinarily a defense⁶⁶ and precludes the recovery of damages where it contributes to⁶⁷ or causes⁶⁸ the death or injury, provided it does so directly and proximately, as discussed infra § 287. The rule applies notwithstanding negligence on the part of the company concurs in causing the injury,⁶⁹ as in failing to keep a proper lookout for travelers or vehicles,⁷⁰ or in running at an excessive or unquest, automobile was in gear and ignition switch was on, and motorist's wife, who was the only occupant of automobile, could not drive, and motor suddenly started and automobile crashed into wall, motorist could not recover from street railroad under the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria, which means, that to which a person assents is not deemed in law an injury.—Levlon v. Violation of "vigilant watch ordinance"

(1) The violation by a street railroad company of an ordinance requiring its motormen and conductors to keep a vigilant watch for persons on or moving toward its track, and, on the first appearance of danger to such persons, to stop the car in the shortest time and space possible will not lawful rate of speed⁷¹ or without giving a proper signal or warning.⁷² Where the injured person is not guilty of negligence and has exercised the requisite degree of care, he is entitled to recover for injuries received by him through the company's negligence.⁷³

§ 264. Reliance on Precautions of Company Generally

A person on the street may assume that the company will exercise ordinary care in managing and operating its streetcars, although he may not abandon all precautions or reasonable care for his self-protection.

In exercising care for his own protection, a person on a public street, who, as discussed supra § 207, ordinarily has, subject to certain qualifications, an equal right with the street railroad company to use that part of the street occupied by its tracks, has a right to act on the assumption that the company will exercise ordinary care in managing its road and operating its cars,⁷⁴ unless he has knowledge to the contrary.⁷⁵ Accordingly, a failure to anticipate and guard against negligence of the company is not necessarily negligence on the part of a person injured thereby;⁷⁶ and it has been held that if the company by its own negligence throws a person off his guard or puts him in peril, the conduct of such person will not be regarded as contributory negligence under any circumstances.⁷⁷ However, a person is not justified in abandoning all precautions or reasonable care for self-protection;⁷⁸ and his failure to exercise reasonable care and precaution for his own protection is not excused by the fact that he relied on the company's exercising ordinary care,⁷⁹ or by the company's failure to take a certain precaution, if he did not rely on such precaution.⁸⁰

§ 265. Acts in Emergency or Sudden Peril

A person is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence if in an emergency or sudden peril, brought about without his own fault, he errs in judgment as to the best course to protect himself.

A person is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery if, in an emergency, or when suddenly confronted with unexpected and imminent peril, brought about by the negligence of the company or without his own fault, he errs in judgment or does not pursue the best course to protect himself.⁸¹ The rule does not apply where there authorize a recovery by one injured, where he was guilty of negligence, which, with the failure of the company's employees to obey the ordinance, contributed to and caused the injury.—Hill v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo., 64 S.W.2d 633—Chervek v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo. App., 173 S.W.2d 599—60 C.J. p 485 note 34 [a].

is no unexpected peril,⁸² or where the peril or emergency is caused partially or entirely by the fault or negligence of the person killed or injured.⁸³

§ 266. Violation of Statute, Ordinance, or Rule of Company

One may be guilty of contributory negligence where at the time he is injured he is violating a statute or ordinance and such violation proximately causes or contributes to the injury.

A person may be guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery, notwithstanding negligence on the part of the company, where at the time he is injured he is violating a statute or ordinance,⁸⁴ and such violation is the proximate cause of,⁸⁵ or contributes to,⁸⁶ the injury. However, the violation of a statute or ordinance does not necessarily constitute contributory negligence,⁸⁷ and it does not prevent the recovery of damages unless it directly⁸⁸ and proximately⁸⁹ causes or contributes to the injury. Obviously, a claim of contributory negligence consisting of an alleged violation of an ordinance is without merit where the ordinance is not violated,⁹⁰ as where, under the circumstances, the ordinance was inapplicable.⁹¹

The violation of a statute or ordinance does not preclude recovery where the injury is caused by wantonness or recklessness on the part of the company, as discussed supra § 211.

Violation of rule or regulation of company by a person while a passenger does not proximately contribute to an injury sustained by him after he ceases to be a passenger;⁹² nor does it relieve the company from exercising due care to avoid injuring him while lawfully on the street or highway.⁹³ However, a motorman who operates a car in such a way as to violate the rules of his company is guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery for injuries received by him in a collision with a car of another company.⁹⁴

§ 267. Working in Street

One working in a street on or near streetcar tracks is not required to exercise as high a degree of care as to approaching cars as is an ordinary pedestrian; but he must exercise ordinary care under the circumstances.

A person working in a public street on or near street railroad tracks is not required to exercise as high a degree of care in looking and listening for approaching cars as is an ordinary pedestrian on the street.⁹⁵ Thus, he has a right to assume that the motorman of an approaching car will pay some attention to what is going on,⁹⁶ and that some notice of warning of the approach of the car will be given;⁹⁷ and the circumstances of the particular case may be such that he may not properly be held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.⁹⁸ However, a person so engaged must exercise such care for his safety as an ordinarily careful and

Only reasonable degree of care required

A motorist, becoming aware of peril of collision with approaching streetcar after entering what proved to be position of danger because of streetcar motorman's unanticipated negligence at point from which solid line of parked automobiles extended to place of collision, was required to exercise only reasonable degree of care under circumstances.—*Bowman v. prudent man giving attention to, and faithfully performing, his work would exercise under like circumstances;⁹⁹ and, if he fails to exercise such care, whereby he is injured, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery.¹ One who places himself in a position of danger while working, when a position of safety was equally available, is guilty of negligence.²

§ 268. Standing, Leaning, Stooping, or Crouching, on or near Track

A person contributes to his own injury where with knowledge, or the opportunity of acquiring knowledge, that a car is approaching he stands on or in close proximity to, or takes some other dangerous position with respect to, the tracks.

A person contributes to his own injury, and may not recover damages therefor, where, with knowledge,³ or opportunity of acquiring knowledge,⁴ that a car is approaching, and without taking precautions to prevent injury to himself,⁵ such as stepping aside to a place of safety,⁶ he voluntarily and unnecessarily stands on,⁷ or in close proximity to,⁸ leans over,⁹ stoops over¹⁰ or near,¹¹ or squats or crouches near¹² a street railroad track, and is struck by, or comes in contact with, the front end, side, rear door, or overhanging rear end of the car, or the bodies of persons clinging thereto. However, a person standing in the street near a street railroad track because of a temporary blockade of the street by wagons is, as a matter of law, not guilty of contributory negligence.¹³ So also, a person is not negligent in standing in a space in the roadway where he will not be struck by a car unless it leaves the track;¹⁴ and standing on the sidewalk in front of a depot is not contributory negligence.¹⁵

Call of third person. It is held that a person influenced in his action by the call of someone on the street, so that he stops and stands in the middle of a streetcar track immediately in front of an approaching car or train, is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery for injuries caused by his being struck;¹⁶ but it is also held that the company is not relieved from liability where a third person gives a cry of alarm for the purpose of giving notice of plaintiff's peril to the men operating the car,¹⁷ even though he makes an erroneous decision in the presence of imminent danger making immediate action of some kind necessary.¹⁸

§ 269. Walking on or near Track

While it is not negligence per se for a person to walk on or near street railroad tracks, a person so doing must exercise ordinary and reasonable care to ascertain and avoid danger.

As a general rule a person has a right to walk on or near a street railroad track in a public street or highway, as discussed supra § 207, and it is not negligence per se to exercise this right,¹⁹ even at night.²⁰ Thus, a person is not required to stay off the track in order to avoid injuries which might possibly result from the carelessness or negligence of the company;²¹ and, if he is injured by such carelessness or negligence while walking on the track, the fact that he might have walked by the side of the track is not contributory negligence on his part.²² Not being a trespasser, he is not required to use the same degree of care as if walking on a private way²³ or on or along the track of a steam or ordinary railroad.²⁴

On the other hand, a person walking on or along a streetcar track is required to exercise ordinary and reasonable care to ascertain and avoid danger,²⁵ as in looking and listening for an approaching car,²⁶ and in getting out of the way so as not to make it stop or slow down;²⁷ and, if he fails to exercise ordinary care, whereby he is injured, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery,²⁸ even though the company is negligent,²⁹ unless it could avoid the accident by proper care after discovering his peril, without endangering its passengers and employees, as discussed infra § 288. Thus, a person is guilty of contributory negligence where, while walking on or along the track of a street railroad, he sees or by reasonable care could see an approaching car in time to get or keep out of the way, but fails to do so,³⁰ although the walking there is better than on the street or highway,³¹ or where he walks on the track knowing that a car is due, although he frequently looks behind for it.³² Also, a pedestrian is guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery of damages where, with knowledge or notice of a curve in the track, he places himself in, and fails to remove himself from, danger from the overhang of an ordinary car rounding the curve.³³

Assumption. A person walking on or near a streetcar track is not bound to assume or anticipate that cars will be run contrary to custom,³⁴ or that he will be run into by a car approaching him from the rear at an excessive rate of speed in broad daylight, on a straight track, without warning;³⁵ and he may assume in a proper case that the motorman will stop before running him down.³⁶ On the other hand, a person who sees a car standing near a curve in the immediate vicinity, and knows that it is in service, does not have a right to dismiss it from his mind and assume that it will not move around the curve.³⁷

Sole cause. Fact that others saw or heard a streetcar approaching did not render the act of a person who failed to get off the track the sole cause of the accident, where the car was being operated at full speed on a dark night, with no headlight, by a motorman who had his face to the rear, and rang no gong at or near a point where, owing to the condition of the street, many people were accustomed to walk between or along the car tracks.³⁸

§ 270. Crossing Track

- a. In general
- b. Degree of care required
- c. Belief, assumption, or anticipation

a. In General

While it is not ordinarily negligence per se to cross street railroad tracks on which a car is approaching, a person must exercise some care for his own safety, and, if he carelessly attempts to cross in front of a car which is dangerously near, he may be guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery.

Ordinarily it is not negligence per se to cross or attempt to cross a street railroad track on which a car is approaching,³⁹ in plain sight,⁴⁰ some distance away,⁴¹ or in front of a standing car;⁴² or between two standing cars.⁴³ However, a person, when crossing, or about to cross, a street railroad track, must exercise some care or caution for his own safety;⁴⁴ and he is not relieved of the necessity of doing so, or the responsibility for the result of not doing so, by the company's negligence,⁴⁵ or by an ordinance or statute as to the right of way over vehicles at street intersections,⁴⁶ or by a signal to cross given him by the company's watchman.⁴⁷

Miscalculation or error of judgment. While there is some authority to the contrary,⁴⁸ it has frequently been held that a pedestrian is guilty of contributory negligence where he makes a mistake, miscalculation, or error of judgment, in deciding to attempt to cross a street railroad track when a car is approaching, and is injured while making the attempt,⁴⁹ especially where, after making the estimate or calculation, he does not verify it by looking again.⁵⁰

When car dangerously near. Where a person deliberately,⁵¹ or heedlessly or carelessly,⁵² or without excuse⁵³ or necessity,⁵⁴ steps on and attempts to cross a street railroad track in front of a car which he sees or hears, or which by ordinary care he could see or hear, approaching dangerously near,⁵⁵ as where he attempts to run or hurry across in front of such a car,⁵⁶ whereby he is run into and injured or killed, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery of damages, in some cases as a matter of law,⁵⁷ even though the company is also guilty of contemporaneous negligence,⁵⁸ and although he has an equal right to the use of the crossing or street.⁵⁹

Traffic signals. A pedestrian does not take reasonable precaution to insure his own personal safety when he does not pay attention to preliminary gongs or bells warning all users of the street that the course of traffic is about to be changed;⁶⁰ and a pedestrian who walks into the side of a streetcar which is proceeding in accordance with the traffic signals is guilty of contributory negligence.⁶¹ On the other hand, a pedestrian obeying traffic directions given by an officer or a signal may undertake the crossing of a street railroad track, although streetcar traffic is approaching within a distance which might otherwise be dangerous;⁶² and he is not bound to anticipate that the streetcar will be negligently operated through a red traffic signal at an intersection.⁶³ So also, a pedestrian is ordinarily justified in leaving the curb and starting across the street where the traffic lights are in his favor;⁶⁴

and, where the signal changes while he is in the middle of the street, he may assume that due care will be exercised by the released streetcar.⁶⁵ Nevertheless, a pedestrian, even though crossing with the traffic signal, is bound to exercise due care,⁶⁶ and whether his conduct where the light changes while he is en route across the tracks constitutes contributory negligence depends on the circumstances of the particular case.⁶⁷

Crossing at place other than regular crossing. Ordinarily it is not negligence per se to cross or attempt to cross a street railroad track at a place other than a regular crossing or street intersection,⁶⁸ in the absence of a city ordinance requiring pedestrians to cross streets only at places indicated.⁶⁹ However, there is authority to the effect that a greater degree of care must be used in crossing at a point other than a regular crossing;⁷⁰ and a pedestrian deliberately attempting to cross the tracks between regular crossings ordinarily will be charged with such carelessness as to prevent his recovery for injuries sustained when struck by the streetcar.⁷¹

b. Degree of Care Required

The degree of care required of a pedestrian in crossing streetcar tracks depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, and is generally such care as would be exercised by a reasonably prudent person under similar circumstances.

The degree of care required of a person about to cross, or attempting to cross, a street railroad track depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case,⁷² and is such care as would be exercised by a reasonably prudent person under the same or similar circumstances.⁷³ Similarly, whether or not an injured person has been guilty of contributory negligence depends on the proximity and speed of the streetcar and all other relevant circumstances.⁷⁴ Accordingly, in approaching or attempting to cross a street railroad track a pedestrian must have due regard to the conditions,⁷⁵ and must avail himself of his knowledge of conditions with which he is familiar⁷⁶ or which are permitted⁷⁷ or required⁷⁸ by law.

He is required to exercise due⁷⁹ and proper⁸⁰ care, and to refrain from rashly or recklessly exposing himself to danger.⁸¹ It is his duty to exercise reasonable and ordinary care⁸² to learn of the approach of cars,⁸³ keep or get out of their way,⁸⁴ and avoid a collision or accident.⁸⁵ Conversely, he is required to exercise only ordinary care.⁸⁶

The danger he is bound to foresee and avoid is that of being injured by cars operated in a proper and legal manner.⁸⁷ He may not properly undertake to cross a street railway track in front of a visibly approaching car, running under normal conditions, without leaving himself sufficient time to

Danger from other traffic

Fact that pedestrian in middle of street, when crossing street at night at intersection where traffic was heavy, was in place of danger from which he could escape only by moving to one side of street was material fact to be considered in deciding whether pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law in trying to walk across track after observing car approaching about eighty feet from him.—Chagnon v. United Elec. Rys. Co., 200 A. 949, 61 R.I. 246, 275.

Pedestrian held contributorily negligent under circumstances

(1) An adult pedestrian, familiar with surroundings, who crossed street at a T intersection when a streetcar fully illuminated was proceeding at usual speed of twenty to twenty-two miles an hour where there were no passengers waiting to board the car, was contributorily negligent in failing to get out of the way, precluding recovery for his death.—Rajak v. Cummings, 41 N.E. 2d 969, 314 Ill.App. 465.

(2) Where pedestrian crossing street to catch streetcar saw lights of approaching car seven hundred feet away, was at all times in position to judge its speed, and saw that streetcar was traveling at rapid speed, in absence of traffic to distract his attention, he was guilty of "contributory negligence" in continuing to cross street, precluding recovery for his death.—Hynek v. clear the track before the arrival of the car,⁸⁸ or when an attempt to cross appears hazardous.⁸⁹ On the other hand, he is not guilty of contributory negligence by the mere fact that he attempts to cross a street railroad track in front of an approaching car where it would reasonably appear to a person of ordinary prudence that he would have ample time to cross in safety,⁹⁰ but he is in fact prevented from crossing in safety by some unforeseen and unavoidable occurrence or accident,⁹¹ as by reason of his slipping or stumbling, and falling on the track,⁹² or by reason of the car's running at an excessive or unlawful rate of speed,⁹³ unless he has knowledge of such speed before attempting to cross, in which case he must take the speed into consideration.⁹⁴

Care as to different kinds of railroads. Although a higher degree of care is required in crossing an electric railroad than in crossing a horse railroad,⁹⁵ as high a degree of care is not required in crossing a street railroad as in crossing an ordinary steam railroad.⁹⁶ However, when crossing an electric or interurban railway upon a private right of way in the open country, the same standard of care has been held to apply as to the crossing of steam railroads.⁹⁷

street railroad track, a pedestrian is held to no higher duty,⁹⁸ and is not subject to a more stringent rule of law,⁹⁹ than a person in charge of a vehicle, nevertheless he has, in a considerable measure, a larger opportunity for protecting himself than a driver of a vehicle,¹ in that he has more thorough control over his own movements,² and has nothing to control except his own locomotion;³ and this is an important circumstance to be considered on the issue of contributory negligence.⁴

Care of pedestrian and motorman compared. A person attempting to cross a street railroad track when a car is rapidly approaching is as much obligated to look out for his own safety as is the motorman.⁵

c. Belief, Assumption, or Anticipation

A person crossing or about to cross street railroad tracks has the right to assume and believe that the company and the car operators will exercise due care and have regard for his safety; but such belief or assumption does not absolve him from exercising care for his own safety.

A person about to cross, or attempting to cross, a street railroad track has, in the absence of notice or knowledge to the contrary,⁶ a right to assume and believe that the street railroad company⁷ and the operators of its cars⁸ will exercise due care, and will obey the law;⁹ and he need not anticipate negligence on the part of the company,¹⁰ or assume that a motorman will not attend to his duties.¹¹ He has a right to assume and believe that a car will be run with some regard to his rights on the street,¹² and not in disregard of his safety,¹³ and, where the pedestrian has the right of way, that the operator of the streetcar will respect his right.¹⁴

A pedestrian crossing streetcar tracks may also assume that the car will not be run at night without a headlight,¹⁵ and that, where it is standing, it will not be so started and operated as to strike him,¹⁶ particularly where the motorman has by signal invited the pedestrian to place himself in the dangerous position.¹⁷ Also, in the absence of a warning to the contrary, he has a right to assume that streetcar tracks¹⁸ and a pavement crossing¹⁹ are in a reasonably safe condition, and that a motorman expects pedestrians to cross on a crosswalk.²⁰

On the other hand, no belief or assumption on his part will absolve a pedestrian crossing or about to cross street railroad tracks from the duty of attending to his own safety,²¹ by exercising proper²² care²³ and paying close attention to approaching cars.²⁴ Moreover, it is improper for a person, with knowledge that a car is approaching, to step heedlessly in front of it, under the assumption that it will not overtake him;²⁵ and it has been asserted that a pedestrian crossing a streetcar track cannot properly rely on what he thinks the motorman will do.²⁶

Speed and control of car generally. Where he is not aware that it is being run at a higher rate of speed, a person attempting to cross, or about to cross, a street railroad track has a right to assume, believe, and expect that a car is running, and will run, at the customary speed,²⁷ or at the speed reasonably required by the circumstances,²⁸ and not at a reckless²⁹ or prohibited³⁰ rate of speed, and that

Fact that trolley car is confined to track and cannot be turned aside to avoid collision with a pedestrian does not render inapplicable the rule that pedestrian, in deciding whether to cross a street in front of approaching vehicle which is not so close and moving at such speed as to make a collision unavoidable if pedestrian attempts to cross, has right to rely to some extent on expectation that driver of vehicle will use reasonable care to avoid colliding with pedestrians.—*Chagnon v. it will be under proper³¹ and reasonable³² control.³³ However, a person using a highway crossing in the country must assume that trolley cars run faster there than in the city.³⁴

Slackening speed of car. According to some authorities a person is not guilty of contributory negligence merely because his crossing involves the slackening of the speed of the car,³⁵ where the motorman has ample opportunity to see plaintiff attempting to cross the track,³⁶ or there is reason to suppose the car will slow down and give time for the crossing,³⁷ since it may be assumed that it will slow down or slacken speed at a crossing³⁸ to protect travelers who may be expected thereon.³⁹ However, it is otherwise where the car is only a few feet away.⁴⁰ Moreover, according to other authorities a reasonably prudent man will not take a chance of a streetcar slowing down to allow him to cross.⁴¹

Signal or warning. A person approaching, or about to cross, a street railroad track has a right to assume and believe that an approaching car will give a signal or warning⁴² in accordance with law⁴³ or custom,⁴⁴ especially when a standing car ob-

structs the view;⁴⁵ and this right of reliance on a warning is entitled to consideration in determining whether a pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence.⁴⁶ However, a motorman's signal to a pedestrian to pass in front of a standing car does not carry an assurance that the pedestrian can safely cross a parallel track.⁴⁷

Stopping car. A person has a right to assume that a car will stop on signal⁴⁸ at a regular stopping place⁴⁹ for the purpose of permitting people standing at a corner to become passengers,⁵⁰ or that it will stop at an intersection where a statute, custom, or rule so requires,⁵¹ or, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, at a traffic signal so requiring; but he has no right to assume that because a car has slowed down it will stop.⁵²

Difficulty in stopping

Although pedestrian crossing street and streetcar had equal rights at intersection, a reasonably prudent man in such circumstances would forego his technical right to cross the street until it was reasonably safe to do so, and would take into consideration the fact that a man on foot may stop almost instantly on appearance of danger while it requires some distance to stop a heavy streetcar.—Russell v. and listen; but the rule is not as strictly applied to street railroads as it is to steam railroads.

A person approaching, or about to cross, a street railroad track should, for his own protection, use his senses of sight and hearing;⁵³ and under some circumstances it is his duty to look and listen for approaching cars.⁵⁴ Accordingly, his failure to perform this duty constitutes contributory negligence precluding a recovery of damages for his death or injury resulting from his coming in contact with a car,⁵⁵ even though the traffic signal is in the pedestrian's favor,⁵⁶ provided the contributory negligence is the proximate cause of the injury;⁵⁷ and this is so notwithstanding negligence on the part of the company,⁵⁸ unless the company willfully or wantonly inflicts the injury, as discussed supra § 211, or fails to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring him after discovering his peril, as discussed infra § 291.

For example, a person is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery of damages where he goes upon a track without looking or listening, when he knows that cars are passing every few minutes;⁵⁹ goes along heedlessly with his head covered or ears muffled,⁶⁰ or otherwise allows his attention to become so absorbed that he gives no heed to his danger;⁶¹ or attempts to cross immediately behind a passing or standing car or other vehicle,⁶² without looking or listening for an approaching car on the same or opposite track.

On the other hand, except in some jurisdictions,⁶³ the duty to look and listen is not an absolute one⁶⁴ or one which exists under all circumstances,⁶⁵ and it is not negligence per se or as a matter of law,⁶⁶ under all circumstances,⁶⁷ to fail to look or listen for an approaching car before attempting to cross; such failure is negligence only when the situation and surrounding circumstances are such that a person of ordinary prudence would have looked and listened.⁶⁸

Stopping or waiting. A person about to cross a street railroad track must stop and wait, under some circumstances⁶⁹ when necessary⁷⁰ for his safety,⁷¹ as where he sees an approaching car in close proximity,⁷² his view is temporarily obstructed,⁷³ or it is

Meaning of requirement

The requirement that a man shall "look and listen" before crossing street railroad track means only that he shall observe and estimate with reasonable accuracy his distance from the car and the speed of its oncoming, and then make calculation and comparison of the time it will take the car to come and the time it will take to cross the track, and, if under the same circumstances a reasonably prudent person would attempt to cross at a given speed, he will not be negligent in doing so.—Kansas City Public Service Co. v. apparent that a motorman does not intend to respect the pedestrian's right to cross first.⁷⁴ On the other hand, it is not always the duty of a person to stop before attempting to cross a street railroad track in a city⁷⁵ and he is not under an absolute duty⁷⁶ or hard and fast rule⁷⁷ to do so. Ordinarily, he is not required to stop, before attempting to cross, in order to look and listen;⁷⁸ nor is he bound to wait because a car is in sight.⁷⁹ Where he stopped before crossing the first track, he is not required to stop again between the tracks.⁸⁰

Duty with respect to steam railroads compared. The rule that it is the duty of a person approaching a steam railroad crossing to stop, look, and listen, discussed in Railroads §§ 772-790, does not apply⁸¹ with all its force,⁸² rigor,⁸³ and strictness⁸⁴ to a person approaching, or about to cross, a street railroad track; and he need not exercise the same high degree of care in this respect as is required in crossing a steam railroad.⁸⁵

b. Manner and Extent of Looking and Listening

A person about to cross streetcar tracks must look and listen with ordinary care and diligence at the appropriate time and place until he is safe.

As a general rule it is the duty of a person about to cross a street railroad track to exercise ordinary care and diligence, according to the circumstances, to look and listen for approaching cars in time to avoid an accident;⁸⁶ and he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery for injuries received where he goes on or attempts to cross the track without exercising ordinary care to look and listen for an approaching car which is in close proximity and which by ordinary care he could see or hear in time to avoid the accident.⁸⁷ So also, he is guilty of contributory negligence where, although he looks or listens, he fails to see or hear a car which is plainly visible.⁸⁸ However, it is otherwise where his failure to see or hear the car in question when looking and listening is due to the noise and lights of many automobiles traveling at the time on the street which he is attempting to cross,⁸⁹ or some other valid reason.⁹⁰ Where a pedestrian's vision of streetcars is obscured by darkness, obstructions, etc., he must exercise increased vigilance in looking out for a streetcar.⁹¹

Time and place. When a person approaching a street railroad track is required to look and listen for an approaching car, he must do so at the time and place required in the exercise of ordinary care,⁹² which will be reasonably effective⁹³ to afford him information of the presence of an approaching car⁹⁴ and enable him to act safely with respect to any danger observed.⁹⁵ According to some authorities, it is necessary to look immediately before entering on the track,⁹⁶ or at the last moment or opportunity before passing the line between safety and peril;⁹⁷ and it is not sufficient to look only while at the curb,⁹⁸ when first entering on the street,⁹⁹ or at the instant when struck.¹ However, according to other authorities, a person is not required to look or listen at any particular place.² It has been held that a person is charged with the duty to look and listen for approaching cars on the street which he is crossing³ but not those whose route is confined to the street on which he is proceeding.⁴

Subsequent or continuous look. Generally speaking, the duty of a person about, or attempting, to cross a street railroad track to look and listen continues until he is safely across,⁵ or until the point of danger is reached,⁶ or until he has reached the track,⁷ or at least he is bound to look again or keep on looking where his view is somewhat obscured at one time;⁸ and his failure to look again or keep a lookout may constitute contributory negligence,⁹ as where he looks only when he is some distance from the track, and, although there is nothing to obstruct his view, he fails to look or listen when he is about to step on it,¹⁰ or where he has seen the car approaching when he first looked, but failed to continue to look or look again.¹¹ However, he need not look constantly¹² at every step¹³ from the time he leaves the curb until he reaches the car track;¹⁴

Negligence per se

Traveler must look for approaching cars immediately before entering upon a streetcar track, failure to do so being negligence per se.—Weldon v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 41 A.2d 856, 352 Pa. 103—Rea v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 22 A.2d 68, 146 Pa.Super. 251, affirmed 25 A.2d 730, 344 Pa. 421.

and, except in some jurisdictions,¹⁵ it is not negligence for him to attempt to cross without looking and listening again where, when he first looks and starts to cross, it is reasonably apparent that he will have plenty of time under ordinary circumstances to do so.¹⁶

Crossing at place other than regular crossing. A pedestrian crossing the street at a place other than the regular crossing or intersection has the duty of looking to avoid being hit by a streetcar.¹⁷

Direction. Ordinarily, a person must look in both directions,¹⁸ and is guilty of contributory negligence where he looks only in one direction when he can see the approaching car if he also looks in the opposite direction.¹⁹ However, in some jurisdictions a failure to look in both directions is not negligence per se,²⁰ and whether it is²¹ or is not²² negligence in fact depends on the circumstances. Certainly, an ordinarily prudent man is under the duty, before placing himself in a position of danger, to look in the direction of the anticipated peril.²³

Distance. Before attempting to cross a street railroad track, a person need look only far enough to warrant an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances to conclude that no car is so near as to endanger his safety in crossing.²⁴

Traffic signals. Where a traffic light, which was in favor of the pedestrian when he started to cross, changes and the pedestrian continues to cross without looking in the direction of the released traffic he is guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover.²⁵

§ 272. Passing under Elevated Structure

There is no negligence in passing under the structure of an elevated railroad or in looking up as the train passes, but a pedestrian must use due caution in crossing a street in which a street railroad track is laid above the street surface.

A person on the surface of the street is not bound to wait until a train on an elevated railroad has passed, or until no train is passing overhead, before going under such structure;²⁶ nor is it necessarily contributory negligence for a person to look up as an elevated train is passing.²⁷ However, in crossing a street in which a street railroad track is laid above the street's surface, a pedestrian must bring to bear a degree of care and prudence referable to the changed condition wrought by the presence of the street railway track so constructed,²⁸ provided he is aware, or reasonable prudence would advise an ordinarily prudent man, that the street railway track is so located.²⁹

§ 273. Riding Bicycle or Motorcycle

A person riding a bicycle or motorcycle is guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery where he fails to exercise due care at street railroad tracks and such failure is the proximate cause of injury.

A bicycle rider on a public street in the exercise of ordinary care has the right to assume that a street railroad company has performed or will properly perform its duty;³⁰ and a person who is unaccustomed to riding a bicycle is not guilty of contributory negligence so as to preclude a recovery where he loses control of the bicycle, and is injured through the negligent operation of a car.³¹ However, except where by the exercise of ordinary care the company could have avoided the rider's injury after discovering his peril, as discussed infra § 291, a bicyclist is guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery where he rides his wheel between or so near to street railroad tracks as to be in danger because of passing cars, without looking and listening for the approach of cars from in front or behind,³² and without exercising reasonable care to turn out for such a car;³³ or where he rides between tracks which are close together while two cars are passing;³⁴ or where he heedlessly or carelessly attempts to ride across in front of an approaching car, which he sees or hears, or which he should see or hear,³⁵ as where he heedlessly or carelessly rides from behind one car on the adjacent track in front of an approaching car.³⁶

Excuse for failure to hear. A bicycle rider is excused from hearing the sound of an approaching car where, at the time, there is another car in the immediate vicinity, going in the opposite direction, and he believes that all the noise he hears emanates from the latter car.³⁷

Duty to stop. A bicycle rider is not bound as a matter of law to stop, alight from his wheel, and look intently for cars before attempting to cross, in order to relieve himself of the charge of contributory negligence;³⁸ nor is he negligent as a matter of law if he does not stop and wait until a car, which he sees approaching some distance away, has passed.³⁹

death of, or injury to, a motorcycle rider in a collision with a streetcar where he so negligently rode his motorcycle on or toward the car track as to bring about the collision.⁴⁰ It has been held to be negligence for three men to ride on a single-seated motorcycle.⁴¹ A motorcyclist may recover for injuries received as a result of the wheel becoming stuck in a rut, which defect or obstruction is due to the negligence of the street railway company, where the motorist is not contributorily negligent.⁴²

§ 274. Driving, Occupying, or Alighting from Vehicle; Riding or Driving Horse

- a. In general
- b. Assumptions as to conduct of company and its servants

a. In General

While more care than usual has been held necessary in the case of heavy trucks and tractor-trailers, generally a person driving a motor vehicle or other vehicle on a street occupied by a street railroad must use ordinary care, and only such care, to avoid the incidental dangers.

While a person driving a motor vehicle, or riding or driving a horse or team, on a street occupied by a street railroad has an equal right to the use of the street, as discussed supra § 207, the streetcar tracks are a warning to him of possible danger,⁴³ and it is his duty to exercise his right to use the street with due regard for the right of the streetcar,⁴⁴ and to exercise reasonable and ordinary care and precaution under the circumstances to avoid death or injury through dangers incident to the management and operation of the road,⁴⁵ and to perform specific duties imposed on him by the law.⁴⁶ Accordingly, if he fails to exercise such care, he is guilty of contributory negligence which will preclude a recovery of damages for his death or personal injury, or for injury to property,⁴⁷ even though the company or its servants are also negligent,⁴⁸ unless the servants of the company fail to exercise ordinary care to avoid the accident after discovering his peril, as discussed infra § 291, or the case is one of an emergency or a sudden and imminent peril brought about by the negligence of the streetcar company and without the fault of the injured person, as discussed supra § 265.

On the other hand, a driver of an automobile or other vehicle need not exercise more than ordinary and reasonable care,⁴⁹ and, if he exercises such care as would be exercised by a reasonably prudent man under the same or similar circumstances, he is not guilty of contributory negligence,⁵⁰ and may recover for injuries received by reason of negligence in the operation of streetcars,⁵¹ or defects or obstructions in or near the tracks due to the negligence of the company.⁵²

Heavy trucks and tractor-trailers. It has been held that in the case of heavy trucks and tractor-trailers which are unwieldy the exercise of more care than usual is necessary.⁵³

Neglecting opportunity to escape. It has been held that to show contributory negligence by the driver of a vehicle struck by a streetcar, it must appear that after he saw his own danger, or could have seen it by using ordinary care, he had an opportunity to escape and failed to avail himself of it.⁵⁴

b. Assumptions as to Conduct of Company and Its Servants

Depending on the circumstances, the driver of a vehicle may make various assumptions, as that the company and its servants will use reasonable care to avoid injuring him, or with respect to the control, speed, or stopping of the car; but he cannot rely absolutely on such assumptions.

(2) Where motorist intending to alight from left door of automobile and to walk around automobile to sidewalk was struck by trolley bus in attempting to alight from left door, motorist was not rendered guilty of "negligence per se" by section of city traffic code making it unlawful for any person to be in any roadway other than a safety zone or crosswalk but providing that the section should not be construed to prevent necessary use of roadway by a pedestrian.—Stricklin v. Reason for rule

The increasing number of heavy trucks and tractor-trailer combinations on public highways imposes a servitude thereon which, in comparison with less unwieldy and less dangerous vehicles, calls for the exercise of more than usual care to avoid injury.—National Hauling Contractors Co. v. Baltimore Transit Co., 44 A.2d 450, 185 Md. 158.

54. Ind.—Schilling v. Indianapolis & C. Traction Co., 96 N.E. 167, 97 N. E. 124, 51 Ind.App. 131.

In exercising reasonable care for his own protection, a driver of a motor vehicle, or of a horse, team, or other vehicle, or a rider of a horse, has a right, to a limited extent at least, and until he sees or knows the contrary, to assume that the street railroad company and its servants will operate their cars properly, and are exercising, and will exercise, ordinary and reasonable care to avoid running into and injuring him,⁵⁵ particularly when the traffic signals are in the motorist's favor,⁵⁶ and that they do and will obey the law.⁵⁷ However, he is not justified in relying altogether on such assumption,⁵⁸ but must take proper measures for his own safety;⁵⁹ and he cannot properly place himself in a position of manifest danger on the assumption that another person who controls the sources of danger will act so as to control them for his safety.⁶⁰

other vehicle has a right to assume that the motor-man of an approaching car has,⁶² and will keep,⁶³ it under control, or will bring, or attempt to bring, it under control.⁶⁴

Speed. Unless he has knowledge of facts to the contrary,⁶⁵ a driver of a vehicle has a right to assume and expect that a streetcar is being, and will be, run at a rate of speed which is lawful,⁶⁶ ordinary,⁶⁷ customary,⁶⁸ reasonable or moderate,⁶⁹ and not excessive.⁷⁰ Also, it has been held that he may properly assume that the speed of the streetcar will be checked or reduced where it is excessive,⁷¹ where he is driving on the track under exigent circumstances and a reduction of speed is necessary to prevent a collision,⁷² where a crossing is being approached,⁷³ or where he is attempting to cross the track ahead of the car and a reduction of the speed of the car is necessary to enable him to do so.⁷⁴ However, he has no right to trust solely to a slowing down of the car;⁷⁵ and there is, ordinarily, less reason for expecting the speed of a streetcar to be reduced, in order to avoid danger of a collision with another vehicle, between, than at, crossings.⁷⁶ Moreover, a driver crossing a street in front of an approaching streetcar is not justified in assuming that the speed of the streetcar will not be increased.⁷⁷

Stopping. A driver of a vehicle has no right to assume that a streetcar will stop between street intersections,⁷⁸ at a point which is not a regular stopping place,⁷⁹ or even at a crossing or street intersection,⁸⁰ unless there is a custom to stop there for passengers,⁸¹ or unless there is an ordinance or legislative direction requiring it to do so.⁸² Moreover, even where he may assume that the car will stop, as where there are passengers waiting at a regular stopping place,⁸³ a motorist cannot rely thereon absolutely but must make use of his own senses.⁸⁴ Also, a driver is not warranted in concluding that a car will stop because it has slowed down.⁸⁵

On the other hand, a driver may properly assume that the servants in charge of a car will, on the first appearance of danger, stop the car in the shortest time possible,⁸⁶ and, in the absence of any indication to the contrary,⁸⁷ that the command of a traffic signal will be obeyed.⁸⁸ It may also be assumed, in the absence of any indication to the contrary, that a streetcar will observe the legislative direction with respect to stopping and will not stop suddenly at a place other than a regularly established stop.⁸⁹

Yielding right of way. Where the circumstances warrant it, the driver of a motor vehicle has a right to assume that a motorman will grant or yield the right of way,⁹⁰ particularly where all indications are that he will do so.⁹¹

Status of company. A driver is justified in assuming that the tracks he is about to cross are those of an ordinary street railroad company, where they appear to be such and the company has never given notice to the public that it is operating under a steam railroad charter.⁹²

Other matters. A driver crossing the tracks at a street intersection may properly assume that a car standing at the corner will not be put in motion while he is crossing.⁹³ So also, he may properly assume and anticipate that a proper lookout for vehicles is being, and will be, kept by the servants of a street railroad company in charge of a car,⁹⁴ that the

Motorist traveling behind trolley

A motorist who was traveling in same direction at distance of approximately fifteen feet directly behind trolley car was warranted in assuming, until he discovered that it was contrary to the facts, that operator of trolley car would observe legislative direction with respect to stopping trolley car at places established as "regular stops" and otherwise exercise reasonable care in use of streets.—Higbee v. Atlantic City & Shore R. Co., supra.

streetcar will have a proper headlight in operation at night,⁹⁵ and that proper and timely signals warning of the approach of a car will be given;⁹⁶ but it is improper for him to rely wholly on such assumption.⁹⁷ It has been held that, in the absence of anything to put a motorist on notice to the contrary, he may assume that he is seen by the motorman of an approaching car;⁹⁸ but there is also some authority to the contrary.⁹⁹

Generally it is not contributory negligence to drive a horse on a street near streetcars, unless the driver knows of danger of his horse becoming frightened and another street is available.

It is not contributory negligence per se for a person to drive a horse in a street on which a street railroad is operated,¹ where there is no reason to believe that it will become frightened and unmanageable by the operation of cars,² although he can drive on another street.³ However, except in some jurisdictions,⁴ it is contributory negligence for a person who knows that there is danger of his horse becoming frightened to drive it on a street near streetcars,⁵ if he can drive on another street without serious inconvenience.⁶

A person in charge of horses on a street on which cars run must handle the horses in a reasonably prudent manner;⁷ but it cannot be laid down as a hard and fast rule that a person who is driving, or is with, a horse on a car track must at all times have the horse under his control.⁸

§ 276. — Driving on or along Track in General

A person driving on or along a street railroad track must exercise ordinary and reasonable care commensurate with the danger; and he must look for approaching cars.

A person driving on, or along and close to, a street railroad track is required to exercise ordinary and reasonable care;⁹ and, while he is not required to exercise more than ordinary and reasonable care,¹⁰ nevertheless the care exercised must be commensurate with the danger,¹¹ which is greater on or along the track than in another part of the street,¹² particularly where it is dark and there are no street lights,¹³ or where the streetcars are operated by electricity rather than drawn by horses.¹⁴

Looking and listening. It is the duty of a person driving on or along a street railroad track to exercise reasonable care, under the circumstances, to ascertain whether or not a car is approaching.¹⁵

Motorist backing onto streetcar tracks, having clear view of approaching streetcar until he was

Thus, he must look for approaching cars,¹⁶ not only at the time of entry on the track,¹⁷ but also from time to time thereafter;¹⁸ and he must look in both directions,¹⁹ not only ahead,²⁰ but also to the rear,²¹ although he is not bound constantly to look back.²² Accordingly, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery of damages where he is struck by a streetcar by reason of his failure to comply with the requirements hereinbefore mentioned.²³ It is sometimes held or stated that he must listen,²⁴ at least where he does not look behind him.²⁵

Particular acts as contributory negligence. It is not contributory negligence per se to drive a vehicle on, or in close proximity to, a street railroad track on a public street,²⁶ particularly where the public has been in the habit of using the tracks for that purpose,²⁷ or where it is necessary to drive on the tracks by reason of the street outside the tracks being torn up for repairs or otherwise obstructed,²⁸ even though the street, except where so obstructed, is of sufficient width to permit of driving off the track, out of the way of passing cars,²⁹ and even though the rear of the vehicle is closed so as to obstruct the driver's view in that direction.³⁰ Also, the mere fact that a driver enters on a track, or proceeds along it for some distance, without looking around, or without looking back more than once, does not charge him with contributory negligence if, under all the circumstances, his conduct is consistent with ordinary prudence;³¹ and, where he does not know that a car is approaching, his failure to signal the motorman to stop is not contributory negligence.³²

On the other hand, it has been held that motorists have the duty as a rule to keep away from a streetcar, since they have greater freedom of motion than the streetcar;³³ and the driving of a vehicle on a street railroad track, or along it and so close thereto as to be in the path of a moving car, may constitute contributory negligence under some circumstances,³⁴ as where the driver knows or should know that a car is approaching,³⁵ the vehicle is suddenly driven onto the track when a moving streetcar is so near that the motorman cannot, in the exercise of due care, avoid a collision,³⁶ the driver's view is obstructed,³⁷ or he fails to make any effort,³⁸ by looking³⁹ or listening,⁴⁰ to ascertain whether a car is approaching, and, by the exercise of reasonable care, an approaching car could be discovered by him in time to avoid a collision.⁴¹

§ 277. — Duty to Turn Out for Cars

The driver of a vehicle on or along street railroad tracks must use reasonable care to turn off or away from the tracks when he knows or should know of an approaching streetcar, and must keep out of the way when passing streetcars.

It is the duty of a person driving a vehicle on or along street railroad tracks to exercise reasonable care to turn off or away from the tracks when he sees or hears, or by ordinary care should see or hear, a car approaching;⁴² and, if he fails to exercise proper care to turn out after he is aware or should have become aware of the car's approach,⁴³ or willfully neglects or refuses to turn out, although he has ample opportunity to do so,⁴⁴ whereby a collision or accident is caused, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery for his injuries, notwithstanding concurring negligence on the part of the company,⁴⁵ unless the servants of the company willfully or wantonly cause the injury, as discussed supra § 211.

When driving past a car, the driver must keep out of its way,⁴⁶ and at curves in the street he must drive further from the car than at other points;⁴⁷ but, where the track gradually and imperceptibly approaches the curb, a person is not bound as a matter of law to discover the situation and danger created thereby unless every prudent user of a motor vehicle over the same street would ordinarily discover the situation and danger at that particular point.⁴⁸ On the other hand, a driver ordinarily is not guilty of contributory negligence if he turns off or uses every reasonable effort to do so, after he knows, or should know of the car's approach;⁴⁹ and, where he drives on or near a street railroad track to avoid an obstacle, he is not bound to turn out to avoid an approaching car until he has passed the obstacle.⁵⁰

To turn wheels out of rail grooves

Truck driver who in attempting to turn wheels of truck out of grooves along streetcar rails suddenly steered truck toward on-coming streetcar, about 20 feet distant on adjoining track, was held guilty of negligence as matter of law.—Bowers v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 259 N.W. 244, 219 Iowa 944.

§ 278. — Attempting to Cross in Front of Car

The driver of a vehicle must approach a streetcar crossing with due regard for the rights of the streetcar, and must exercise reasonable and ordinary care; and a failure to do so constitutes contributory negligence precluding recovery.

The driver of a vehicle must approach a streetcar crossing with due regard for the rights of the streetcar.⁵¹ Moreover, in attempting to cross a street railroad track a driver of a horse, team, or vehicle must exercise reasonable and ordinary care and prudence, or such care as an ordinarily prudent person similarly situated would exercise,⁵² even though the driver may technically have the right of way,⁵³ as where the traffic signal or control is in his favor.⁵⁴ The nature and extent of the care and precaution to be exercised depend on the circumstances of the particular case;⁵⁵ and, if the driver fails to exercise such care, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery of damages,⁵⁶ in some cases as a matter of law,⁵⁷

Seconds of precedence

Even if, as a general proposition, a preferential right of way of a streetcar at intersection must yield to right of way conferred by traffic regulation on an automobile which precedes streetcar into intersection, where motorist has precedence under traffic regulations by less than two seconds, motorist is negligent if he proceeds into path of streetcar so close at hand when he is able to stop within three or four feet and save himself from injury.—Capital Transit Co. v. Smallwood, 162 F.2d 14, 82 U.S.App.D.C. 228.

Circumstances to be considered

(1) Speed and distance of approaching car, presence or absence of traffic signals, traffic conditions, etc., must be considered.—McCraley v. George, 38 A.2d 360, 155 Pa.Super. 116.

(2) Elements to be considered were the distance of the streetcar from the automobile and the speed at which the streetcar and the automobile were traveling.—Bruno v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 200 A. 893, 132 Pa.Super. 414.

Heavy traffic on other side of track

Truck driver who, when he started across interurban car track, saw, or should have seen, that crossing in all probability would be blocked by automobiles passing on other side of crossing, and that he would either have to stop or move slowly to avoid automobiles, and continued across track when streetcar was only six hundred seventy feet away, was held negligent, precluding recovery for collision.—Virginia Elec. & Power Co. v. Tractor driver who proceeded to cross intersection at rate of seven miles per hour after having seen streetcar three hundred feet distant approaching at rate of twenty-five to thirty miles per hour, and whose tractor was struck by streetcar, was contributorily negligent as matter of law in view of undisputed physical facts.—Robards v. notwithstanding concurring negligence on the part of the servants of the company,⁵⁸ unless they act willfully or wantonly, as discussed supra § 211, or fail to exercise reasonable care to avert the accident after discovering the driver's peril, as discussed infra § 288.

The above rules have been applied to the driver of a vehicle where he carelessly or negligently attempts to drive across ahead of a car which he sees or hears approaching in dangerous proximity,⁵⁹ or which by the exercise of ordinary care he could see or hear so approaching, as discussed infra § 279 c (1), or where he suddenly and without warning turns his horse, team, or vehicle across the track directly in front of an approaching car,⁶⁰ or where he crosses the tracks when an approaching car which he has seen is about to make a turn.⁶¹ The fact that a street railway maintains an automatic warning signal does not absolve a motorist from exercising reasonable care on crossing the tracks.⁶²

Where a funeral procession crossing or turning at an intersection has the right of way over streetcars, the individual drivers of the vehicles in the procession are not relieved from exercising ordinary care.⁶³

On the other hand, only ordinary, and not extraordinary, care is required;⁶⁴ and the degree of caution required with respect to street railways is not the same as that required as to railroad crossings, since streetcars do not have such a paramount right to the use of the street as to have an exclusive right of way there.⁶⁵ Accordingly, if a driver, in attempting to cross a streetcar track, exercises what under the circumstances is reasonable and ordinary care, he may recover for injuries received through the negligence of the street railroad company.⁶⁶ Unless his view is obstructed, as discussed infra § 279 d, it is not negligence for him to attempt to cross where there is no approaching car within view;⁶⁷ nor is it contributory negligence as a matter of law to attempt to drive across in front of or between standing cars.⁶⁸ Moreover, it is not ordinarily contributory negligence per se, or as a matter of law, for him to drive his vehicle on a street railroad track in an attempt to cross in front of an approaching car,⁶⁹ at least where the circumstances are such that he has reasonable grounds for believing, or it would appear to an ordinarily prudent person, that he can cross in safety, if both he and the persons in charge of the car act with reasonable regard to the rights of each other,⁷⁰ or where he has ample time to cross when he starts to do so, but is delayed in crossing by some intervening agency.⁷¹

who had observed moving streetcar continuously from point one hundred fifty feet distant to point of collision, was held contributorily negligent, precluding recovery by his employer for injuries sustained in accident.—Bahan v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 179 A. 802, 118 Pa.Super. 569.

Car lacking headlight

Motorist would have right to proceed into intersection if, when starting into intersection, she could not reasonably see or know of approach of streetcar by reason of want of headlight or signal and by obstruction of her view created by glaring lights.—Deiling v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 251 N.W. 622, 217 Iowa 687.

Miscalculation. A driver has no right to calculate close chances,⁷² or speculate on the chances,⁷³ of crossing a track ahead of a streetcar; and a recovery of damages is precluded where he miscalculates time, distance, or speed and then attempts to cross.⁷⁴ Accordingly, an honest belief of a motorist that he can cross an intersection before an approaching streetcar will reach it will not excuse his negligence in so attempting;⁷⁵ but absolute accuracy of judgment is not required.⁷⁶

U-turn. Under a statutory provision to that effect, a motorist making a U-turn across streetcar tracks is required to exercise the highest degree of care for his own safety and the safety of others;⁷⁷ and the making of such a turn across the tracks in front of a car rapidly approaching which could have been seen had the motorist looked is contributory negligence as a matter of law.⁷⁸

Streetcar crossing intersection. Under some statutes or ordinances it is negligence for a driver to proceed on or across car tracks in front of a streetcar which has started to cross an intersection.⁷⁹ However, it has been held that such a provision does not apply to an intersection where traffic is controlled by traffic signals.⁸⁰

§ 279. — Duty to Stop, Look, and Listen

- a. General rule
- b. Stopping or waiting
- c. Looking and listening
- d. Where view or hearing obstructed

a. General Rule

The "stop, look, and listen rule" applies to drivers of vehicles at crossings of suburban or interurban railroads in the country, but does not apply, at least not to the same extent, to trolley crossings in city streets.

While the "stop, look, and listen rule" applied in railroad cases, as discussed in Railroads §§ 772-790, has been held not to apply to drivers of vehicles at trolley crossings in city streets,⁸¹ at least not to the extent that it is imposed on travelers in other cases,⁸² the rule does apply to the crossing of an electric suburban or interurban railroad in the country,⁸³ and has been held to be applicable

In motorist's action for injuries received when automobile was struck by streetcar in front of which motorist attempted to pass in making left turn at intersection at which traffic light was in favor of motorist, the motorist was not required to estimate the speed of the streetcar in miles per hour in order to establish that even within city limits when streetcar tracks are separated from the traveled way of the street or highway.⁸⁴ However, where traffic signals at the intersection are in favor of the driver, and against the streetcar, the driver is not required to stop, look, and listen before crossing the intersection.⁸⁵

b. Stopping or Waiting

Under some circumstances the driver of a vehicle must stop and wait for a streetcar to pass before crossing the track, but there is no invariable rule requiring him to stop under all circumstances.

Under some circumstances it is the duty of a driver to stop⁸⁶ and wait for a car to pass,⁸⁷ before attempting to cross the track, and under such circumstances his failure to stop constitutes contributory negligence.⁸⁸

On the other hand, except in a few jurisdictions,⁸⁹ there is no fixed, absolute, arbitrary, and invariable rule that a driver must, under all circumstances, stop before attempting to cross a street railroad track.⁹⁰ Also, he is not bound or required to wait merely because a car is in sight,⁹¹ if he has a reasonable time to cross,⁹² particularly where the traffic signal is in the motorist's favor,⁹³ or the car is such distance from him that, as a prudent person, he believes that he has ample time to cross.⁹⁴

Stopping in safe place. Where the circumstances are such as to make it his duty to stop, the driver of a vehicle must stop in a safe place.⁹⁵

c. Looking and Listening

- (1) In general
- (2) Time, place, distance, and direction
- (3) Looking and listening again or continuously

(1) In General

The driver of a vehicle should use ordinary care to look and listen for approaching streetcars before attempting to cross streetcar tracks; but this is not generally regarded as an absolute duty.

Ordinary care for his own protection requires a driver to exercise such precaution and diligence to look and listen for approaching cars before he attempts to cross a street railroad track as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances,⁹⁶ even where the traffic signals are in his favor,⁹⁷ at least where the motorist knows that streetcars are being operated at such crossing;⁹⁸ and he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery of damages where he attempts to cross when a car is approaching in dangerous proximity and, by reason of his failure to exercise ordinary and proper care in looking or listening, he does not discover it in time to avoid a collision.⁹⁹ This is true unless the servants of the company are guilty of willful or wanton negligence, as discussed supra § 211, or fail to exercise due care after discovering the driver's peril to avoid injuring him, as discussed infra § 288.

On the other hand, a driver is required to exercise only ordinary,¹ and not extraordinary,² care in looking and listening; and, if he has his horse, team, or vehicle under control, as discussed supra § 278, and exercises every reasonable effort to ascertain whether a car is approaching before he attempts to go across the tracks, he is not guilty of contributory negligence, notwithstanding he fails to see the car in time to avoid being injured.³ Indeed, in a number of jurisdictions, there is no absolute rule of law that a driver must, under all circumstances, look and listen for an approaching car before attempting to cross the track of a street railroad,⁴ and it is not contributory negligence as a matter of law in all cases for him to fail to look and listen.⁵ However, in some jurisdictions he is bound to look and listen;⁶ and in other jurisdictions he is under an absolute and imperative duty to look.⁷

Tracks curving in front of vehicle. A motorist should maintain a reasonable alertness in looking in the direction from which danger is to be anticipated, as where the streetcar tracks turn left in front of the course of the automobile;⁸ but the motorist's ignorance of the presence of tracks and his inability to see them because of darkness are factors to be taken into consideration in determining whether he was guilty of contributory negligence.⁹

Vehicle turning to cross tracks. It is the duty of a person driving along a street, before turning to cross streetcar tracks, to use reasonable care to ascertain whether or not a car is approaching,¹⁰ especially where the attempt to cross is made in the middle of a block or at any place other than a regular crossing;¹¹ and he is guilty of contributory negligence where he suddenly turns his team or vehicle across the tracks without properly looking or listening for an approaching car.¹² However, where, after a streetcar passes a driver, he turns to cross the street behind the car, no negligence is attributable to him in not looking to see if the car is backing.¹³

U-turns. A motorist attempting a U-turn has the duty to look for oncoming vehicles including streetcars.¹⁴

Funeral procession. Where a funeral procession crossing or turning at an intersection has the right of way over streetcars, the individual drivers of the vehicles in the procession have the duty of looking before entering on the tracks.¹⁵

(2) Time, Place, Distance, and Direction

The driver of a vehicle approaching a crossing of street railroad tracks should look and listen at such time and place as make the looking and listening effective; and he should look in both directions and for such distance as will enable him to determine whether he may safely attempt to cross.

It is the duty of the driver of a vehicle approaching a street railroad crossing to look and listen at such time and place and in such manner as will make the looking and listening effective;¹⁶ and he should look and listen at such a point that he can stop if necessary to avoid a collision.¹⁷ In some jurisdictions it is declared that the law does not require a driver to look and listen at any particular time¹⁸ or place,¹⁹ but in other jurisdictions a driver is required to look immediately before entering on the track,²⁰ or, in other words, at the last moment of opportunity before passing from the zone of safety into the zone of danger.²¹ Moreover, when crossing a double line of tracks the motorist must look for approaching streetcars at the entrance of each track before he attempts to cross it.²²

cient care,²³ as is also looking half a block before reaching the crossing.²⁴ Also, it is contributory negligence to fail to look within two minutes before attempting to cross,²⁵ or when within fifteen²⁶ or even sixty²⁷ feet of the crossing; and under the circumstances the failure of a driver to see a car until it is within twenty feet of him may be contributory negligence.²⁸ So, also, it is negligence to delay looking until it is no longer possible to avoid a collision with the approaching car,²⁹ as when the horse, team, or vehicle, or part thereof, is actually on the track.³⁰ However, a driver is not required to look over or beyond walls for cars brought out of sheds or barns.³¹

Direction. In exercising ordinary and reasonable care, a driver should ordinarily, when he has an opportunity for doing so, look along the track in both directions;³² and his failure to look in the direction from which a car is approaching is contributory negligence where, if he had looked in that direction, he might have discovered and avoided the car.³³

Distance. He is bound to view the tracks for, and only for, such distance as will enable him, as a reasonably prudent man, to determine whether he may safely attempt to cross.³⁴ The probable,³⁵ lawful,³⁶ and reasonable³⁷ speed of a car is to be taken into consideration in determining the distance he should look.

(3) Looking and Listening Again or Continuously

The duty of a driver to look and listen continues until he reaches the track, and, where his observation was made some distance from the track, he should look and listen again just before crossing.

The duty of a driver to look and listen for approaching cars before attempting to cross a street railroad track continues,³⁸ as far as possible under the circumstances,³⁹ generally until he reaches the track.⁴⁰ Where he has looked and listened at some distance from the point of crossing, he should look, or look and listen, again just before driving onto the tracks;⁴¹ and he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery,⁴² in some instances as a matter of law,⁴³ where, although he looks and listens at some distance from the track, he carelessly and heedlessly attempts to cross without looking and listening again before going onto the track.

On the other hand, a driver is not required to look constantly⁴⁴ at all points of his approach to the crossing.⁴⁵ Accordingly, it has been held that, where at the time he looks, or looks and listens, along the track, and starts to drive across, he has reasonable grounds for believing that he can cross in safety, taking into consideration his distance from the track and the distance at which a car is approaching, or could be seen approaching, if in sight, and the relative speed of his own vehicle and that of the car under ordinary circumstances, he is not guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross without further looking or listening,⁴⁶ particularly where his progress across the track is interfered with by a diverting circumstance such as a defect or obstruction of which he had no knowledge.⁴⁷

d. Where View or Hearing Obstructed

Where the view or sound of approaching streetcars is obstructed, a driver should use increased care, and, where his view is obstructed he should resort to other means.

If the view or sound of approaching cars is obstructed, a driver should use increased care and caution, as to stopping, listening, or looking, in proportion to such condition;⁴⁸ and where driver cannot rely on either sight or hearing for protection, as where a car is passing on a near-by parallel track,⁴⁹ or his vision is obstructed and his vehicle is making a continuous noise,⁵⁰ he should stop, rather than attempt to cross at that time.

View obstructed. The duty of a driver to look for approaching streetcars before attempting to cross a street railroad track is not performed by looking from a point where the view is obstructed.⁵¹ In such case, he should look again⁵² from a place of safety where his view is unobstructed;⁵³ and, if necessary, he should resort to other means,⁵⁴ such as listening⁵⁵ or, under other circumstances, listen-

The rule that motorist must look and continue to look in crossing streetcar tracks does not require something humanly impossible; nor is it a rule requiring observance with universal uniformity or with mathematical precision, since motorist is also under duty to look in other directions.—Hoffman v. ing more intently,⁵⁶ stopping⁵⁷ and waiting,⁵⁸ or at least having his vehicle under such control that it can be stopped in time to avoid injury.⁵⁹ The taking of these extra precautions is a positive duty,⁶⁰ and an attempt to cross without taking the proper precautions in this respect constitutes contributory negligence, generally, as a matter of law.⁶¹

On the other hand, undue emphasis should not be placed on an obstruction of view where it continues only a few seconds and both before and after it exists the view is unobstructed.⁶² So, also, it cannot be said that a driver is, under all circumstances, to be conclusively charged with negligence if, before reaching a point which commands a clear view, he approaches a crossing without discovering a car coasting down grade;⁶³ and, where a driver looks at a point where he has an unobstructed view, his failure to stop, listen, or look again at another point nearer the track where his view is obstructed is not necessarily contributory negligence.⁶⁴ Where the view is obscured to within a few feet of the tracks and the driver of a motor vehicle exercises the care required of him by stopping before going onto the tracks or having the vehicle under control, he is not required to get out of the vehicle and look for approaching street-cars.⁶⁵

§ 280. — Failure to Observe Law of Road

Except where there may be a violation of a statute or regulation, a driver's failure to observe the rule of keeping to the right is not necessarily contributory negligence.

Except where there is a violation of an applicable statutory or municipal regulation requiring vehicles to keep to the right-hand side of the street,⁶⁶ the mere fact that a driver of a vehicle on a public street fails to observe the rule of keeping to the right is not such negligence as will preclude him from recovering for injuries sustained through the negligence of the street railroad company.⁶⁷ Thus, the mere fact that a driver, on meeting a streetcar, turns to the left to allow it to pass instead of to the right is not of itself contributory negligence.⁶⁸ Indeed, it may be contributory negligence not to turn to the left, when by so doing an accident can be avoided.⁶⁹ However, under some circumstances, it may be contributory negligence to turn to the left in front of an approaching car.⁷⁰

with wheels of truck astride one rail of streetcar track was insufficient to show a violation of statute requiring all vehicles to keep as close to right-hand side of highway as practicable, in absence of any evidence as to surrounding conditions at time and place so that driver of truck would not be precluded from recovering for injuries sustained in collision with streetcar.—Burris v. railway tracks is guilty of contributory negligence depends on the circumstances of the particular case.

On the ground that the street railway's right to use the track is superior to that of others to occupy it,⁷¹ stopping or leaving a horse, team, or vehicle on a street railroad track, or so near thereto as to be in the path of a moving car, may constitute contributory negligence under the circumstances,⁷² as where it is done voluntarily⁷³ and unnecessarily,⁷⁴ after dark,⁷⁵ or on a dark and foggy day,⁷⁶ with knowledge that a car is approaching,⁷⁷ or that at any time one may pass.⁷⁸

On the other hand, stopping a horse, team, or vehicle on, or in close proximity to, a street railroad track is not negligence per se, or as a matter of law, in all cases,⁷⁹ as where it is not safe or feasible to move,⁸⁰ or no car is seen approaching and there is no reason to apprehend that one will approach before the vehicle is moved;⁸¹ and even where it is negligence, it does not preclude recovery unless it is the proximate cause of the injury.⁸² So, also, notwithstanding the railway's superior right to the use of the tracks, occupation of them for a short period of time for a legal purpose is not necessarily negligence,⁸³ as in the case of a truck driver who, acting in a reasonable manner, stops his truck on the tracks to make or pick up a delivery, where there is no other available space convenient to the premises,⁸⁴ and the vehicle temporarily stopped on the tracks is in clear unobstructed view of the approaching streetcar.⁸⁵ Moreover, it has been held that such temporary stopping of a truck for the purpose of unloading is not contributory negligence as a violation of "parking" provisions of a vehicle code.⁸⁶

Stalling of motor vehicle. The accidental stalling of a motor vehicle on a street railroad track may be the proximate cause of the injury or damage in question.⁸⁷ However, where an automobile or traction engine stalls on a track, it is the duty of the person in charge thereof to give a signal or warning, with reasonable promptness, to the persons operating

Misjudgment of motorist as to clearance of car

In motorist's action to recover damages suffered when motorist who had passed streetcar stopped automobile at intersection near streetcar tracks and was struck by car approaching from rear, fact that motorist mistakenly believed that position of automobile would not interfere with free movement of streetcar would not relieve him from being guilty of contributory negligence resulting from stopping so close to tracks.—Pollock v. an approaching streetcar;⁸⁸ and a failure to do so properly constitutes contributory negligence.⁸⁹ The failure of a driver of a stalled motor vehicle on the trolley tracks to push his vehicle off the tracks where he has sufficient time to do so may similarly preclude him from recovering for personal injury or damage sustained when the streetcar struck the vehicle.⁹⁰

Stopping for traffic lights. The fact that a motorist stops because of a change in the traffic lights does not prevent him from being contributorily negligent in stopping too near the streetcar tracks at the time that a streetcar was close behind him and moving rapidly,⁹¹ at least where there was room for the motorist to have stopped his vehicle where it would not have encroached on the car tracks.⁹²

§ 282. — Occupant of Vehicle Driven by Another

- a. In general
- b. Reliance on driver; anticipation of danger

a. In General

The occupant of a vehicle driven by another, where he is not guilty of contributory negligence, may recover for injury resulting from the negligence of the streetcar company. The occupant must exercise ordinary care, should look for approaching streetcars, and warn or protest to the driver about dangerous conditions.

Where an occupant, such as a guest or passenger, of an automobile or other vehicle is not guilty of contributory negligence,⁹³ and he is killed or injured in a collision between the vehicle and a streetcar, which is caused by the negligence of the street railroad company alone,⁹⁴ or by the concurring negligence of the driver and the motorman,⁹⁵ damages for his death or injury may be recovered from the street railroad company.

Under rules of general application, as discussed in Negligence § 168, the negligence of the driver cannot be imputed to the occupant⁹⁶ unless the driver is the servant or agent of the occupant,⁹⁷ or the occupant otherwise has the right to direct and control the driver's actions.⁹⁸ However, this rule does not relieve the occupant from the duty of exercising ordinary and reasonable care for his own safety;⁹⁹ and, where he fails to exercise such care, he is guilty of contributory negligence preventing a recovery of damages for his death or injury,¹ unless his negligence does not cause or contribute to his death or injury.² In order to show contributory negligence as a matter of law, the occupant of the vehicle must have been so situated

No duty to act until emergency created

Where motorist's act in suddenly driving automobile on tracks in front of approaching streetcar created emergency from which neither motorist nor motorman could extricate himself so as to avoid collision, circuit court erred in holding that au-

that by ordinary care on his part, for his own safety, he could and should have appreciated the danger and failed to take steps to avoid it.³ No recovery may be had from the street railroad company where the collision is caused solely by the negligence of the driver.⁴

Care required of driver compared. A guest or passenger in a vehicle is not required to exercise the same care as the driver.⁵ Thus, it has been held that, while it is the driver's duty to exercise the highest degree of care, the guest is required to use only ordinary care.⁶ Moreover, even where the standard of duty has been held to be the same for both occupant and driver, each being bound to exercise ordinary and reasonable care, the measure of, or conduct required to fulfill, that duty is ordinarily different.⁷

Where driver is not negligent, it is not necessary, according to some authorities, for a guest to take any steps for his own safety;⁸ but, according to other authorities, it is incorrect to say that a passenger has no duty of care for his own safety so long as the driver is not negligent.⁹

guest or passenger in a motor vehicle when danger is imminent may constitute contributory negligence;¹⁰ but this is so only when he knows of the danger, or the nature of the situation is such that it can be reasonably inferred that he must realize the peril.¹¹ In order to exercise reasonable care and be free from contributory negligence, it is not necessary for an occupant to alight from a vehicle before it starts on the track.¹²

Looking for cars. The occupant of an automobile or other vehicle driven by another is not required to look constantly,¹³ or under all circumstances,¹⁴ but frequently the circumstances may be such as to require the occupant to look for approaching streetcars;¹⁵ and his failure to see the car in question constitutes contributory negligence precluding a recovery of damages for his death or injury where he could have seen the car in time to avoid the collision if he had looked properly.¹⁶

Warning or protest. The failure of an occupant of a vehicle to warn the driver of a threatened danger, or to object to, or protest against, the driver's conduct may constitute contributory negligence under some circumstances,¹⁷ as where the danger arises from an approaching streetcar¹⁸ and an at-

Failure to step out of vehicle

Where truck, which attempted to cross interurban track, became blocked by traffic on other side of crossing and was struck by interurban car, occupant of truck who saw oncoming car and made no attempt to step out of truck, although his side of truck was open, but relied on motorman to stop car, was held contributorily negligent.—Driscoll v. Virginia Electric & Power Co., 181 S.E. 402, 609, 166 Va. 538.

tempt of the driver to drive on, along, or across the track in front of the car,¹⁹ where the occupant has knowledge of the danger or in the exercise of reasonable care should have knowledge of it,²⁰ and the driver apparently is unaware of the danger,²¹ or is driving recklessly or carelessly.²² However, the failure of an occupant to give an alarm or warning which would be of no avail to avoid the accident does not constitute contributory negligence;²³ and, where the driver is not negligent in attempting to cross ahead of the streetcar in question, a passenger, confronted with the same conditions, is not negligent in taking no active steps to prevent the driver's attempt.²⁴

Riding on running board of automobile. Whether or not riding on the running board or fender of an automobile constitutes contributory negligence usually depends on all the circumstances of the particular case.²⁵

b. Reliance on Driver; Anticipation of Danger

The extent to which the occupant of a vehicle may rely on the driver thereof or on the conduct of the motorman, and the extent to which he should anticipate peril, depends on the circumstances in each case.

An occupant of a vehicle is entitled to rely somewhat on the care of the driver,²⁶ at least if the driver's conduct is such as to induce a reasonably prudent person to think there is no danger;²⁷ and he may rightfully assume that the driver can properly handle the vehicle,²⁸ and will look and listen at a crossing.²⁹ However, he is not entitled, under all circumstances,³⁰ to rely entirely³¹ and implicitly³² on the care and caution of the driver, as when he knows that the automobile is being driven in a reckless manner into a known dangerous place.³³

The occupant has a right to rely, at least to some extent, on the assumption that the motorman will perform the duties imposed on him by law³⁴ and will exercise care to avoid a collision.³⁵

Anticipation. The extent to which a guest or passenger in an automobile should anticipate an impending peril depends on the facts of each case.³⁶ In general, he is under no duty to anticipate that the driver will omit to exercise proper care in crossing a track;³⁷ nor is he bound to anticipate negligence on the part of the motorman³⁸ or that a trolley car will advance at an excessive speed³⁹ and not under reasonable control.⁴⁰

§ 283. Driver or Occupant of Emergency Vehicle

While the driver and occupants of emergency vehicles may assume that streetcars will yield the right of way, they are nevertheless required to use ordinary care; but only ordinary care in the light of the special circumstances is required.

The driver and occupants of an emergency vehicle, such as a police car, fire apparatus, or ambulance, in crossing or driving along streetcar tracks, have a right to assume that the motorman of an approaching streetcar will stop it or otherwise comply with a statute, ordinance, or custom as to yielding the right of way to such vehicle,⁴¹ or other rule or regulation as to traffic generally.⁴² However, the mere fact that such vehicle has a right of way over streetcars, whether by statute, ordinance, or otherwise, does not relieve the driver thereof from exercising ordinary care, in driving across streetcar tracks, to avoid a collision;⁴³ and, if by reason of his failure to exercise due care a collision with a streetcar occurs, resulting in injuries to him or to his vehicle, there can be no recovery therefor from the street railroad company.⁴⁴

On the other hand, the driver and occupants of emergency vehicles are required to exercise only what is ordinary and reasonable care in view of the facts, circumstances, and exigencies of the particular situation;⁴⁵ and by reason of the necessity of proceeding with haste and the greatest practicable speed, the loud alarm sounded by them, and the law or custom as to yielding the right of way to them, many of the rules governing the conduct of an ordinary traveler in the pursuit of his private business are inapplicable,⁴⁶ since they are permitted to exercise less care, caution, and deliberation,⁴⁷ and are often required to take greater risks,⁴⁸ than a private person.

Imputed negligence. The negligence of the driver cannot be imputed to another fireman on his truck or wagon;⁴⁹ and it is not necessarily imputable to the captain of the fire company where the captain cannot, and does not attempt to, control the action of the driver.⁵⁰ Also, the negligence of the driver of a patrol wagon is not to be imputed to a police officer whose duty it is to go with the wagon wherever it is driven by the chauffeur and who has no control over the latter;⁵¹ but it is imputable to an occupant who is in charge of the wagon and in control of the driver,⁵² especially where he knows that the driver is inexperienced in the particular work in which he is engaged.⁵³

Right of emergency vehicle to pass stop signal. Under some statutes an authorized emergency vehicle, such as an ambulance, when responding to an emergency call, may, on approaching a red or stop signal, proceed cautiously past the signal after sounding the siren and displaying red lights so as to warn streetcars and other vehicles.⁵⁴

While a child of tender years may be declared as a matter of law to be free from contributory negligence, a child of sufficient mental capacity and experience may be guilty of contributory negligence, as where he fails to exercise such care as can be expected from such a child under the circumstances.

Where a child, of such tender years that he is incapable of appreciating and avoiding danger, is injured through the negligent operation of a street railroad, he may be declared as a matter of law to be free from contributory negligence.⁵⁵ On the other hand, while a child of sufficient mental capacity and experience to appreciate, to a limited extent at least, the danger of going on or near a street railroad track, is not required in doing so to exercise the same degree and care and caution as a person of mature years,⁵⁶ he is capable of contributory negligence,⁵⁷ and is required to exercise such, and only such, care and precaution as may be reasonably expected of a child of his age, experience, intelligence, judgment, and capacity, under the circumstances,⁵⁸ as where he is attempting to cross in front of an approaching car;⁵⁹ and, if he fails to exercise such care and precaution, whereby he is killed or injured, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery.⁶⁰

It has accordingly been held that a child is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery if he is of sufficient age and intelligence to appreciate danger and take such precautions as such a child would be reasonably expected to take, where he carelessly or heedlessly attempts to cross in front of a car which he sees approaching in dangerous proximity,⁶¹ or he goes on the tracks without properly looking or listening for an approaching car which he could have discovered in time to avoid the accident,⁶² as where he attempts to cross, without properly looking or listening, immediately behind another car.⁶³

§ 285. Old, Infirm, or Afflicted Persons

A person afflicted with a physical disability, who walks on or across a street on which there are car tracks, is not contributorily negligent as a matter of law, but he must exercise greater and unusual care in proportion to his disability. One suddenly or temporarily incapacitated may be incapable of contributory negligence.

While a person who is afflicted with some physical disability, as where he is aged, feeble, crippled, deformed, very large, deaf, nearsighted, or without the use of one eye, has a right, in the exercise of due care, to walk or drive unattended on or across a public street on which there are street railroad tracks,⁶⁴ and his exercise of this right does not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law,⁶⁵ or under all circumstances,⁶⁶ his disability, instead of relieving him from the duty of exercising ordinary care in going on or near a street railroad track,⁶⁷ imposes on him the duty of exercising greater and unusual care and precaution, in proportion to the disability, to avoid injury.⁶⁸

If some of his senses are impaired, he must be more vigilant in the use of his remaining senses.⁶⁹ So, where his hearing is defective, he should be more alert in the use of his other senses;⁷⁰ and, if a deaf person carelessly goes on, along, or in close proximity to, the tracks without properly looking for an approaching car, which he could have discovered in time to avoid injury, he is guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery.⁷¹

Sudden or temporary incapacity. Under some circumstances, a person who becomes suddenly or temporarily incapacitated, as by reason of being drugged,⁷² or becoming sick or otherwise providentially incapacitated,⁷³ may be incapable of contributory negligence.

Intoxication. The fact that a person was intoxicated when killed or injured does not preclude the recovery of damages unless the intoxication contributed to the death or injury;⁷⁴ but there can be no recovery of damages for death or injury caused by contributory negligence arising from voluntary intoxication.⁷⁵

§ 286. Permitting Animal at Large, Unrestrained, or Unattended

The owner of an animal is not entitled to recover for its death or injury where the animal is at large as a result of his negligence; but allowing an animal to run at large is not necessarily contributory negligence.

The owner of an animal is not entitled to recover damages for its death or injury at night where it escaped by reason of his negligence,⁷⁶ or where he drove it along the highway without having it fastened, and without giving any signal to the motorman of an approaching streetcar.⁷⁷ However, it is not contributory negligence for the owner of a hog or cow to allow it to run at large outside the "stock limit."⁷⁸ Also, where a horse is permitted to break loose from a group of horses and continue on the street loose, but closely followed and watched by the owner and his employees, the owner is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.⁷⁹

Horse attached to vehicle. It is not negligence per se temporarily to leave a horse, not of restive or vicious habits, attached to a vehicle, unattended and untied or unfastened in a street along which a street railroad runs;⁸⁰ but so to leave a horse may constitute contributory negligence under the circumstances of the particular case.⁸¹

§ 287. Proximate Cause

Negligence is contributory and will preclude recovery by plaintiff only when it causes or contributes to the injury directly or proximately.

Negligence is contributory and will preclude recovery by plaintiff, in accordance with the general discussion supra § 263, only when such negligence causes or contributes to the injury directly⁸² and proximately.⁸³ Accordingly, negligence on the part of a person sustaining death or injury does not preclude the recovery of damages where it does not cause or contribute to the death or injury proximately,⁸⁴ or directly,⁸⁵ or where it is not the efficient cause,⁸⁶ or where it only remotely causes or contributes to the injury,⁸⁷ as where it occurs after the accident,⁸⁸ or where plaintiff would not have escaped the injury even had he not been negligent.⁸⁹ So, also, as discussed infra § 288, negligence on the part of a person will not preclude recovery where it is a mere condition before the accident, and the death or injury could be prevented by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence on the part of the company after his peril is discovered or should be discovered.

There can of course be no recovery by plaintiff where his negligence is the sole proximate cause of his injuries.⁹⁰ Violation of a statute, ordinance, or rule of the company by the person injured as contributory negligence proximately causing the injury is discussed supra § 266.

8. INJURIES AVOIDABLE NOTWITHSTANDING CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

§ 288. In General

Notwithstanding the negligence of the person killed or injured through the operation of a street railroad, recovery of damages may be had under the rule variously known as "the doctrine of last clear chance," "the humanitarian doctrine," and "the doctrine of discovered peril."

Under a rule referred to by various descriptive terms, the most common being "the doctrine of last clear chance," "the humanitarian doctrine," and "the doctrine of discovered peril," the fact that a person killed or injured through the operation of a street railroad was negligent in placing himself in a position of peril on or near a track will not preclude the recovery of damages from the street railroad company where the company or its servants had notice of his perilous position and thereafter, by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care, could have avoided injuring him.⁹¹ It may apply not only where plaintiff sustained personal injury, but also where an animal⁹² or inanimate object⁹³

about by plaintiff's negligence, actual discovery of situation by defendant's agent in time to avert injury to plaintiff by use of all means at agent's command commensurate with safety to agent, to vehicle agent is operating, and to passengers therein, and agent's subsequent failure to use such means.—Texas Elec. Ry. Co. v. Wooten, Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 463, error refused.

Qualification of general rule

The "last clear chance" doctrine has been formulated as a qualification of the rule that no recovery may be had for injuries resulting from a peril to which the injured person was exposed through his own fault or negligence, and if pedestrian's exposure to the danger of collision with trolley car was not due to any negligence on his part, doctrine was inapplicable.—Hernandez v. belonging to plaintiff was injured or damaged in a collision with a streetcar. The doctrine has been held to apply where the injury complained of was received subsequent to the time of original impact with the car;⁹⁴ but, where it is a matter of mere conjecture whether the whole injury happened at the very moment of collision or partly then and partly afterward, and the rule is otherwise inapplicable, it does not apply to alleged negligence of defendant in failing to stop the car more quickly;⁹⁵ or in moving it ahead, after the collision occurred;⁹⁶ and, where the car was reversed before striking plaintiff, the negligence, if any, of defendant in permitting the reverse action to continue in operation after the forward motion of the car was overcome was part of the original negligence and is not an independent ground of recovery under the doctrine of discovered peril.⁹⁷ By the very nature of things, the doctrine cannot often be applicable in cases for damages resulting from collisions at intersections of streets.⁹⁸

§ 289. Cause of Injury

The humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine applies only where the negligence of the street railroad company was the sole proximate cause of the accident.

The humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine applies in an action to recover damages for death or injury sustained through the operation of a street railroad when, and only when, the negligence of plaintiff or decedent was a mere condition before the accident, or was only a remote, and not a direct or proximate, cause thereof, and the negligence of the company in failing to avoid the accident after it discovered, or under the rules subsequently considered should have discovered, the perilous position of plaintiff or decedent was the sole proximate cause of the accident.⁹⁹

§ 290. — Cessation or Continuance of Plaintiff's Negligence

No recovery can be had where the plaintiff's negligence continues as an operative, proximate, and concurring cause of injury up to the time of the accident or until there is no chance left for the defendant to avoid it in the exercise of the care demanded under the circumstances.

There can be no recovery under the last clear chance doctrine where plaintiff's negligence continues as an operative, proximate, and concurring cause of injury up to the time of the accident¹ or until, as discussed infra §§ 294, 295, there is no chance left for defendant to avoid it by the exercise of the care demanded under the circumstances. In other words, in order to render the doctrine applicable, defendant's negligence must have been the last negligence² and independent of plaintiff's negligence³ and any prior negligence of its own.⁴ However, notwithstanding plaintiff's negligence

In guest's action for injuries sustained in collision between automobile and streetcar, recovery can be had under humanitarian doctrine only on establishing negligence of defendant, and guest cannot recover if injuries were caused solely by negligence of driver of automobile.—Billingsley v. placing him in a position of peril continues up to the time of the injury, it will not bar a recovery where defendant has actual knowledge of his peril in time to prevent injury to him and does not fulfill its duty as to the exercise of care to prevent it,⁵ unless plaintiff becomes conscious of his peril and is guilty of further negligence.⁶ The rule imposing liability in case of actual knowledge does not apply, according to some authorities, where plaintiff's peril was not actually seen although it should have been seen,⁷ although there is other authority applying it to either state of facts.⁸ Where plaintiff's negligence has ceased before the injury, the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine applies where the other attendant circumstances are proper for its application,⁹ as where he has made every reasonable effort to extricate himself from his position of peril.¹⁰

§ 291. Danger or Peril

a. In general

b. Manner of arising

a. In General

The doctrine of last clear chance applies only when the person injured actually comes into, or is actually in, or entering, a position of peril or danger.

The doctrine of last clear chance does not apply in the operation of a street railroad, and the duty of a motorman to stop the car or take other measures to avoid injury to a person on or near the track does not begin, unless and until the person actually comes into,¹¹ or, according to some authorities, is actually in, or entering, a position of peril or danger.¹² A place of danger or position of peril, or "danger zone," as it is sometimes termed, may be either on the track or in the path of a moving car,¹³ or near the track, where the person is approaching either on foot or in a vehicle and it is apparent that he will not, or cannot, stop, and that a collision will occur unless prompt measures to avoid it are taken by the motorman.¹⁴

b. Manner of Arising

The manner in which the plaintiff's peril or danger arose is immaterial.

Although a distinction has been drawn in some decisions in this respect between the humanitarian doctrine and the last clear chance doctrine,¹⁵ the

(1) A truck approaching intersection with private right of way of street railroad at time streetcar was about to enter crossing would not be in imminent peril, within the humanitarian rule, if truck was approaching a position where there was a danger of collision between truck and streetcar.—Lotta v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 117 S.W.2d 296, 342 Mo. 743.

(2) Where driver of automobile is not oblivious and has means at hand to avert collision, streetcar operator is under no duty to act unless it becomes, or should on proper watch become, apparent that automobile is not going to stop before going upon tracks.—Banks v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo.App., 249 S.W.2d 481.

15. In Missouri

(1) A distinction has been drawn between the last clear chance and the humanitarian doctrines, it being stated that the last chance doctrine proceeds on the theory of prior negligence on the part of plaintiff while the humanitarian doctrine is based on the rule which requires every person to protect every other person seen to be in, or about to become in, a position of peril if he may do so by exercising ordinary care for himself and those the conveyance of whom he has charge.—Smith v. Heibel, 137 S.W. 70, 157 Mo.App. 177—60 C.J. p 529 note 36 [a].

(2) In action by motorist for damages sustained in collision with streetcar, motorist's contributory negligence was a defense to defendant's primary negligence, but not to defendant's humanitarian negligence.—Murphy v. St. Louis Public Service Co., 244 S.W.2d 31, 362 Mo. 772.

(3) Antecedent negligence of person in peril cannot be considered in determining liability of street railroad under humanitarian rule.—Kloekener v. St. Louis Public Service Co., 53 S.W.2d 1043, 331 Mo. 396.—Chervek v. St. Louis Public Service Co., App., 173 S.W.2d 599.

(4) Pedestrian who was struck by streetcar which pedestrian was racing could recover for injuries under humanitarian doctrine, notwithstanding pedestrian was grossly negligent.—Walratt v. St. Joseph Ry., Light, Heat & Power Co., Mo.App., 70 S.W.2d 367.

(5) Under humanitarian doctrine in action against street railway by automobile passenger, whether driver was intoxicated was immaterial.—Millhouser v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 55 S.W.2d 673, 331 Mo. 933.

last clear chance doctrine, strictly speaking, implies prior negligence on the part of plaintiff.¹⁶ It is not, however, material in what manner plaintiff's danger arose.¹⁷ He may, for example, have been standing,¹⁸ walking,¹⁹ riding a bicycle,²⁰ or driving a vehicle;²¹ or he may have been proceeding along or near,²² or attempting to cross,²³ the track; and he may either have failed to exercise proper care to look or look and listen,²⁴ or proceeded into, or continued in, the path of a moving car after seeing or hearing it,²⁵ or he may have stopped the vehicle he was driving on the track,²⁶ or have failed to alight from or abandon it when it was stalled on the track.²⁷ Likewise, the doctrine may apply where an occupant, other than the driver, of a vehicle standing so close to a track as to be in the path of a moving car failed to exercise any care in looking out for himself.²⁸

§ 292. — Plaintiff's Knowledge or Ignorance of Peril

Recovery may be had where the plaintiff was ignorant or oblivious of his danger or peril, or where he was aware of it but unable to avoid or escape it.

A person injured through the operation of a street railroad may recover damages under the humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine where he was ignorant or oblivious of his danger or peril and the other elements of the doctrine are present.²⁹ Ordinarily, the injured person's obliviousness of his peril is an element absolutely necessary to a right of recovery under the humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine,³⁰ but it is otherwise where he was aware of the peril and unable to avoid or escape it,³¹ or where he is a child of such tender age as to give as much notice to the motorman that he must act as obliviousness in an adult would give.³²

Where plaintiff knew car was approaching, but was not aware of danger,³³ as where he believed the car would stop before reaching him,³⁴ or that he had time to cross the track ahead of the car,³⁵ his knowledge does not preclude him from recovering under the humanitarian doctrine.

§ 293. — Defendant's Knowledge or Ignorance of Peril

- a. In general
- b. Of plaintiff's presence on or near track
- c. Of plaintiff's ignorance of, or inability to escape from, danger

a. In General

The last clear chance doctrine applies only where the operator of the streetcar actually knew, or in some jurisdictions should, by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care, have seen, discovered, or known of plaintiff's peril or danger.

The humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine does not apply in a street railroad accident case where it does not appear that the company or its servants knew, or, in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care, should have known, of plaintiff's peril or danger in time to avoid the accident.³⁶ Indeed, in a number of jurisdictions the doctrine applies only where the motorman had actual knowledge of plaintiff's peril or danger in time to avoid injury to him;³⁷ but in other jurisdictions the doctrine may apply either where the motorman actually saw, discovered, or knew of plaintiff's peril or danger, or, by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care, should have seen, discovered, or known of it in time to avoid the collision and injury.³⁸ Where knowledge of plaintiff's peril has been acquired, it creates a special duty to take care on the part of the company and its employees.³⁹

b. Of Plaintiff's Presence on or near Track

Mere knowledge of the presence of a person on or near the track without knowledge of his danger or that he is about to put himself in a position of danger will not render the street railroad company liable for a failure to avoid injuring him.

Mere knowledge of the presence of a person near the track, or on the track some distance away, without knowledge of his actual peril, and without notice, warning, or knowledge that he is about to put himself in a position of danger, does not make the street railroad company liable for a failure to avoid injuring him,⁴⁰ since the company has the right, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, to act on the assumption that such person will keep out of danger,⁴¹ or at least exercise ordinary and rea-

Circumstances as determinant

How far motorman of a streetcar should see a man's body lying on or near the track in order to charge him with negligence under the doctrine of discovered peril is to be determined from all surrounding circumstances; and a streetcar motorman was not negligent for failure to see an intoxicated pedestrian lying in the shadows of bushes with no part of his body extending across the rails as the car approached him where he lay one hundred feet from street intersection at which motorman was required to stop.—Heydorn v. New Orleans Public Service, La. App., 35 So.2d 893.

60 C.J. p 532 note 67.

Imminent peril

Motorman's duty under humanitarian doctrine to stop or slacken speed of streetcar, or to warn, in order to avoid collision with automobile, did not arise until driver of automobile was in a position of imminent peril, and in order to bring the case within the humanitarian rule, more is required than a showing of a mere possibility that the accident might have been avoided.—Smith v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo.App., 252 S.W.2d 83.

Failure to warn

A motorman was not negligent under the humanitarian rule in not giving warning of his intention to begin crossing paved part of highway at intersection between highway and private right of way of street railroad, where truck driver saw streetcar before it entered paved portion of highway and when truck driver was two hundred feet from it; and where the truck swerved abruptly to left, running parallel with streetcar crossing intersection, ran along street railroad private right of way, truck passenger was thrown out and under rear wheels of streetcar, and truck finally stopped behind front vestibule of streetcar, humanitarian rule did not apply.—Lotta v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 117 S.W.2d 296, 342 Mo. 743.

sonable care,⁴² and it need not anticipate that a person not in a position of danger will foolishly, heedlessly, or negligently put himself in such a position.⁴³ It is otherwise, however, where the motorman is cognizant of appearances indicating or strongly suggesting danger.⁴⁴ Under an ordinance providing that a motorman shall keep a vigilant watch, more is required of the motorman than is required under the humanitarian doctrine,⁴⁵ and he is required to stop his car on the first appearance of danger,⁴⁶ and he must anticipate that those approaching the track will come within the danger zone and that those within the zone will not seasonably leave it.⁴⁷

c. Of Plaintiff's Ignorance of, or Inability to Escape from, Danger

The last clear chance doctrine will apply where it should have been apparent to the motorman that the plaintiff was oblivious of the peril or that he could not escape therefrom.

Where the motorman of an approaching streetcar saw plaintiff in a position of peril or danger, it is necessary and sufficient to render the humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine applicable that it shall have been apparent to the motorman either that plaintiff was unaware or oblivious of the peril or danger⁴⁸ or was unable to escape, or extricate himself, therefrom.⁴⁹ Likewise, the doctrine will apply where the operator fails to discover an oblivious pedestrian approaching tracks.⁵⁰

§ 294. Ability and Opportunity to Avoid Injury

Ordinarily, the humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine does not apply where the accident was unavoidable by the exercise of the care required under the circumstances.

Ordinarily, the humanitarian doctrine or doctrine of last clear chance does not apply so as to warrant a recovery of damages from a street railroad company where, after the motorman of the car in question became aware, or, in some jurisdictions, after he, by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care, should have become aware, of plaintiff's perilous position on or near the track, he did not have time⁵¹ and opportunity,⁵² and it was impossible for him,⁵³ to avoid the collision and injury, by stopping the car or otherwise, with the means at hand⁵⁴ or any

Duty of motorman

Streetcar motorman, having right to assume that driver of slowly approaching truck would stop before going on track, owed no duty to slacken speed of car or sound warning until it was or should have been apparent to him that driver did not intend to stop.—Elkin v. St. Louis Public Service Co., 74 S.W.2d 600, 335 Mo. 951.

Knowledge of danger

A streetcar motorman does not indicate knowledge that a pedestrian is in danger, so as to make the last clear chance doctrine applicable in action for injuries to passenger struck by streetcar, merely by clanging his gong.—Jackson v. Capitol Transit Co., 99 F.2d 380, 69 App.D.C. 147, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 464, 306 U.S. 630, 83 L.Ed. 1032.

reasonable means,⁵⁵ by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care,⁵⁶ the care required by the circumstances,⁵⁷ or the utmost care.⁵⁸ Conversely, where the other elements of the doctrine are present, it applies where the car could have been stopped in time to avoid the collision.⁵⁹ Also, inability to avoid the injury, by stopping the car or otherwise, does not prevent the application of the doctrine where such inability was due to the company's own negligence in not having a competent driver or motorman on the car,⁶⁰ not having it properly equipped,⁶¹ or in running the car, at the time, at a reckless or unlawful rate of speed.⁶²

§ 295. Care Required after Peril Is, or Should Be, Discovered

After he discovers, or, in some jurisdictions after he, in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care, should discover, the peril or danger, the motorman must use that degree of care which an ordinarily and reasonably prudent person, skilled as a motorman, would use under similar circumstances to avoid a collision.

After the motorman of an approaching streetcar discovers, or, according to the rule obtaining in some jurisdictions, after he, in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care, should discover, the perilous position of a person or his property on, or in close proximity to, the track he should use due⁶³ and proper⁶⁴ care to avoid a collision. In some decisions it is stated that he is required to exercise ordinary and reasonable care,⁶⁵ and in other decisions it is declared that he is required to exercise a high degree of care.⁶⁶ These statements are not irreconcilable, as the motorman must use that degree of care which an ordinarily and reasonably prudent person, skilled as a motorman, would use under similar circumstances to avoid injury,⁶⁷ and such a person would be expected to act with a high degree of intelligent diligence where an emergency requiring quick action to prevent injury arose.⁶⁸ The motorman should act promptly⁶⁹ and use all possible, available, and reasonable means, consistent with safety, to avoid a collision and injury.⁷⁰ More

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiffs' minor son in a collision at intersection between an automobile in which he was riding and an electric trolley bus, condition of road, weather, and brakes were circumstances to be considered in determining whether accident could have been avoided under the humanitarian rule.—Conroy v. St. Joseph Ry., Light, Heat & Power Co., supra.

Right of way

A motorman who had right of way could rely to a reasonable extent on expectation that motorist would exercise due care, but could not rest exclusively on such assumption and proceed unmindful of attending circumstances which might imperil his own safety or that of others.—Brule v. Union St. Ry. Co., 52 N.E.2d 388, 315 Mass. 268.

Fact that humanitarian doctrine, notwithstanding antecedent excessive speed of streetcar which struck rear of automobile, became applicable to situation did not therefore transform antecedent negligent speed into non-negligent or lawful speed, where antecedent negligent speed continued until collision occurred, since otherwise no recovery could be had for primary negligence based on negligent speed.—Bumgardner v. St. Louis Public Service Co., supra.

60 C.J. p 534 note 1.

Duty to passengers

A part of the duty, required of motorman operating a streetcar across a highway at intersection with pri-

specifically, he should, where he has time and opportunity to do so, stop the car,⁷¹ or at least reduce its speed,⁷² and give a warning by sounding a gong or otherwise.⁷³ On the other hand, the street railroad company is not liable under the humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine where, after it discovered, or by reasonable care could have discovered, the injured person's peril, it exercised all reasonable care to avoid the accident,⁷⁴ as where the motorman acted promptly⁷⁵ and did all that it was possible for him to do to avoid the accident.⁷⁶

Also, there can be no recovery under the humanitarian doctrine for a mere error in judgment on the part of the motorman in attempting to stop the car by means of brakes, which he knew to be defective, instead of reversing the power.⁷⁷

A supervisor of the company directing a motorman may, under some circumstances, be charged with the same duty as the motorman in respect of exercising ordinary care to avert injury to a person about to enter the danger zone.⁷⁸

9. ACTIONS FOR INJURIES

Actions for injuries resulting from the operation of street railroads are subject to the general rules governing actions of like character.

In actions for injuries resulting from the operation of street railroads, the cause of action, and the defenses which are available to defendant, are governed by the law of the place where the injury occurred.⁷⁹ A franchise contract requiring the railroad to comply with municipal ordinances does not give a person, injured as a result of the operation of the railroad, the right to sue for breach of contract.⁸⁰

§ 297. Jurisdiction and Venue

In the absence of a special statute providing otherwise, questions with respect to jurisdiction and venue in actions against street railroads for injuries are governed by the general rules applied in civil actions.

Except in so far as regulated by special statutory provisions, the rules governing civil actions for injuries generally apply in actions for injuries against street railroad companies, with respect to questions of jurisdiction⁸¹ and venue.⁸² A statute prescribing vate right of way of street railroad when truck was approaching intersection, was not to do something which would endanger his passengers.—Lotta v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 117 S.W.2d 296, 342 Mo. 743.

Failure to warn

In order to constitute negligence under humanitarian rule in failing to warn motorist of approach of streetcar by sounding gong, motorman must be able to warn motorist and prevent collision thereby, see or be able to see motorist in place of danger in time to sound gong, and know that there will be collision unless gong is sounded.—*Jordan v. Attempt to clear intersection

Where truck was one hundred ten feet from intersection of highway with private right of way of street railroad at time streetcar was halfway across twenty-four-foot strip of paved highway, motorman was not negligent, under humanitarian rule, in using full power to get car off highway, instead of stopping and blocking paved portion of highway.—*Lotta v. Interurban electric railroad operating over private right of way was a "railroad" within statute authorizing bringing of personal injury action in any county through which railroad passes.—Watson v. Brady, 185 N.E. 516, 205 Ind. 1.

Purpose of statute

The purpose of the statute, stating places where an action for injuries or death against a railroad company, interurban, suburban, or street railroad, and stage companies, should be brought, is to prevent the filing of actions in a court far removed from place where cause of action arose, the place where the action may be brought should be liberally construed where it is purely procedural and does not create a new remedy.⁸³

§ 298. Time to Sue and Limitations

Where special statutes exist, suit must be brought within the time prescribed thereby.

Suit to recover for injuries caused by a street railroad must be brought within the time prescribed by special statutory provisions.⁸⁴ The application of general statutes of limitation is discussed in Limitations of Actions § 1 et seq.

§ 299. Parties

Subject to statutory variations the general rules as to parties in civil actions apply in actions for damages caused by the operation of street railroads.

The general rules applicable to parties in civil actions, and the provisions of statutes governing actions against street railroads for injuries resulting from operation of the railroad determine who are necessary⁸⁵ and proper⁸⁶ parties, and control the joinder of parties,⁸⁷ the substitution of parties,⁸⁸ or the bringing in of new parties.⁸⁹ Although a permissive statute allows the assignee of a chose in action to sue in his own name, the owner of a motor vehicle damaged by collision with a streetcar may sue in his own name for damages, although he has assigned his claim to an insurer.⁹⁰

§ 300. Process and Appearance

Service of process in accordance with a statute applicable only to railroads does not confer jurisdiction over a street railroad.

Service of process in accordance with a statute applicable only to railroads does not confer jurisdiction over a street railroad.⁹¹ A statute permitting service to be made on any conductor of a railroad company owning or operating an interurban electric railway, except conductors of electric railroads operating within cities, does not prevent valid service within a city on the conductor of an electric interurban railroad.⁹²

The construction and operation of general statutes relating to process, and the general rules governing process in civil actions are discussed in Process § 1 et seq.

§ 301. Notice of Claim

Where a statute so requires, the plaintiff must give proper notice, within the time prescribed, of the time, place, and cause of injury.

In order that an injured person may bring an action against a street railroad company, he must comply with a statute requiring that the company be given notice within the time prescribed of the time, place, and cause of the injury.⁹³ The purpose of such a statute is to give the street railroad an opportunity to investigate while the facts are fresh and thus protect itself against unfounded claims.⁹⁴ Failure to file a claim against a city within the prescribed time is not excused on the ground that the injured person's mental faculties were continuously impaired by the injury until after expiration of the statutory period,⁹⁵ or on the ground that literal compliance was not necessary where the officials of the city operating the streetcar in its proprietary capacity had full knowledge of the accident.⁹⁶

Sufficiency of notice. The sufficiency of the notice is to be tested with respect to its purpose in furnishing the recipients such available information as is calculated to assist them in self-protection, and in applying the test the circumstances of each case are to be considered.⁹⁷ For the purpose of a husband's recovering consequential damages resulting from injury to his wife, a notice given by his wife is sufficient.⁹⁸

Waiver of notice. While it may be that a street railroad may waive the statutory notice, the waiver must be clear and relied on by plaintiff.⁹⁹

§ 302. Complaint, Declaration, or Petition

- a. In general
- b. Duty of defendant
- c. Breach of duty or negligence
- d. Proximate cause
- e. Power of defendant to avoid injury; last clear chance
- f. Willful or wanton acts or gross negligence
- g. Negating defenses; contributory negligence

a. In General

The plaintiff's initial pleading in an action against a street railroad must state facts sufficient to constitute a legal cause of action.

In an action against a street railroad for injury caused by negligent management or operation of the street railroad, the complaint, declaration, or petition should set out with such reasonable certainty as is necessary to inform defendant of the acts or omissions on which its liability is based all the facts essential to constitute a legal cause of action.¹ Thus, the complaint must set out clear and distinct allegations showing the injured person's right to be on or near the tracks,² and that the acts or omissions constituting the negligence were caused by defendant's servant³ in the course of his employment.⁴ The complaint should be a concise, summary recital of the material facts relied on,⁵ and need not allege immaterial or irrelevant matters,⁶ although the fact that it does allege such matters does not render the pleading bad.⁷ Mere conclusions of law should not be alleged.⁸ In construing a count to determine whether its averments are sufficient, it is not permissible to segregate one part from another, but all of its averments must be construed and considered together.⁹

Ownership or operation. A complaint for injuries caused by negligence with respect to the condition or use of cars or other property must show that such property was owned by, or in possession or control of, defendant at the time of the injuries.¹⁰

ance with general rules, plaintiff may allege several acts of negligence, not inconsistent with each other, in one paragraph or count,¹¹ such as ordinary negligence and last clear chance doctrine.¹²

Amendment. In accordance with, and subject to, general rules, an amendment to the complaint may be allowed where it is not inconsistent with, or contradictory of, the allegations of the complaint,¹³ or where it does not introduce a new or different cause of action.¹⁴ Where the general charge of negligence causing the injury is alleged in the original petition, it is not necessary to repeat it in an amended petition charging specific acts of negligence.¹⁵

Incapacity of person injured. Where it is claimed that the person injured is non sui juris, such incapacity, it has been held, being a matter of fact, should be pleaded.¹⁶

Certainty, definiteness, and particularity. In accordance with, and subject to, general rules, material facts must be stated with a reasonable degree of particularity and certainty in order that defendant may be apprised of what it will be called on to defend,¹⁷ but plaintiff is required to state the facts only as far as they appear to be properly within his knowledge.¹⁸

Consistency or repugnancy. While a petition is defective where its allegations are inconsistent and repugnant,¹⁹ an allegation of the humanitarian doctrine with other allegations not inconsistent therewith is proper.²⁰ Thus, allegations of negligence in running a streetcar at an excessive rate of speed and negligence under the humanitarian doctrine are not inconsistent.²¹ Where the humanitarian doctrine does not necessarily presuppose that the injured person was negligent, an allegation of due care is not inconsistent with a pleading of the humanitarian doctrine.²²

The existence of a legal duty on the part of the defendant to exercise care as to the person or property injured, at the time and place of the injury, must be shown by the plaintiff's pleading.

The complaint must show the existence of a legal duty on the part of defendant to exercise care as to the person or property injured, at the time and place of the injury,²³ and advantage may be taken by demurrer of a failure to allege such duty owed.²⁴ Where it is the duty of a street railroad company to exercise reasonable care so to construct and maintain its tracks as to keep the street in a reasonably safe condition for travel, it is not necessary, it has been held, to allege such duty.²⁵

Knowledge of danger or defect. Where knowledge by defendant of the danger or defective condition which caused the injuries is an essential element of its duty and consequent negligence with respect thereto, plaintiff must allege the existence of actual or constructive knowledge of the danger or defect by defendant.²⁶

Pa.—Culver v. Lehigh Valley Transit Co., 186 A. 70, 322 Pa. 503.

Duty imposed by statute or ordinance. Where the injury occurs through the neglect of a street railroad to comply with a city ordinance and the action is based on such violation, the ordinance should be pleaded.²⁷ It need not be set out in hæc verba,²⁸ but that part of the ordinance relied on, or all the substantial part thereof, should be set out,²⁹ and it should be averred that the ordinance was in force at the time of the injury.³⁰

c. Breach of Duty or Negligence

The plaintiff must allege facts showing a breach of duty or negligence on the part of the defendant, and, where the negligence charged is a breach of a duty imposed by statute or ordinance, the plaintiff must allege facts showing a breach of duty in violation of such statute or ordinance.

Having set out the duty owing to plaintiff by defendant, in accordance with, and subject to, rules of pleading in actions for negligence generally, plaintiff must clearly allege facts showing that defendant's acts or omissions causing the injury were in breach of such duty.³¹ The complaint fails to state a cause of action in negligence where it does not allege an act done or omitted negligently, or allege facts from which the court can say that the acts done or omitted constituted negligence.³² Although there are some decisions to the contrary,³³ it is ordinarily sufficient to allege such negligence in general terms, without setting forth the specific acts constituting it,³⁴ or averring the name of the negligent servant,³⁵ unless there is a motion to make more specific.³⁶ An allegation of sufficient acts causing the injury, coupled with an averment that they were negligently done, is sufficient;³⁷ but, if the allegations undertake to set forth such acts without stating that they were negligently done, it must appear by direct averment that the acts causing the injury were per se the result of negligence, or negligence must appear from a statement of such facts as certainly raise the presumption that the injury was the result of defendant's negligence.³⁸

In order to hold a complaint sufficient it is not necessary that the acts of negligence charged be negligence per se,³⁹ or in violation of a statutory duty or a duty imposed by ordinance,⁴⁰ but it is sufficient if all the acts of negligence charged, when taken together, show a duty owing the injured person, and that the failure to perform such duty resulted in the injuries complained of.⁴¹ While the duty of a motorman to stop the car after he has discovered or should have discovered the peril of a person on or near the tracks may be subordinate to his duty to safeguard the passengers, whether the stop could have been made without injury to the passengers need not be specially pleaded,⁴² but a general averment that the motorman negligently failed to exercise due care is sufficient.⁴³

Breach of statutory duty. Where the negligence charged consists of acts or omissions in violation of a duty imposed by statute or ordinance, in order to allege a cause of action the declaration must allege facts which show a breach of duty in violation of such statute or ordinance.⁴⁴ A complaint setting up a violation of an ordinance which has been repealed prior to the accident does not state a cause of action.⁴⁵ Where the ordinance is merely declaratory of the common law, the legal effect of pleading it specially is the same as if the facts were alleged without reference to the ordinance.⁴⁶

The plaintiff must show by his pleading that the negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of his injury.

Since defendant is liable only for injuries which are proximately caused by its negligence, plaintiff, having set out defendant's duty to him, and a breach of that duty, must also show that the negligence of defendant was the proximate cause of the injury complained of.⁴⁷ A mere allegation of negligence on the part of defendant and of the loss or injury sustained does not charge defendant with responsibility for the damage.⁴⁸ The complaint must allege that defendant's alleged negligence was the sole cause of the injury or that it contributed to the injury.⁴⁹ The complaint is insufficient to state a cause of action as against a demurrer where it fails to show that the negligence charged was the cause of the injury,⁵⁰ or where it appears that the injury was not proximately caused by the negligence charged⁵¹ but by an independent intervening agency.⁵²

e. Power of Defendant to Avoid Injury; Last Clear Chance

In some jurisdictions, but not others, the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine may be invoked and relied on without being specially pleaded.

While in some jurisdictions plaintiff cannot recover on negligence which warrants the application of the last clear chance doctrine without allegations bringing the case within such doctrine,⁵³ in other jurisdictions recovery may be had under a general allegation of negligence.⁵⁴ An allegation of initial negligence is insufficient.⁵⁵ If recovery is sought under the discovered peril doctrine the essential elements must be alleged, or implied, from plaintiff's allegations.⁵⁶ An allegation that defendant failed to exercise due care after discovering plaintiff's peril is sufficient,⁵⁷ without alleging that defendant negligently failed to use due care.⁵⁸ In jurisdictions where actual knowledge of plaintiff's peril is required, an allegation that defendant actually knew is necessary.⁵⁹ In jurisdictions where actual knowledge of plaintiff's peril is not necessary, an allegation that defendant failed to exercise due care to avoid injury after it had or could have discovered plaintiff's peril is sufficient.⁶⁰

(1) A petition alleging that plaintiff was in a position of imminent peril, and that defendant's motorman saw, or in the exercise of ordinary care could have seen him in that position in time, by the exercise of ordinary care thereafter, to have avoided the collision, and thereafter failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid the collision, and that as a direct result of such failure the collision occurred is sufficient under the humanitarian doctrine.—Flynn v. St. Louis Public Service Co., Mo.App., 41 S.W.2d 885.

f. Willful or Wanton Acts or Gross Negligence

Where the gravamen of the complaint is willful or wanton injury it must, in accordance with the general rules of negligence, allege that the injury was willful and wanton.

Where the gravamen of the complaint is willful or wanton injury, it must allege a willful or wanton injury.⁶¹ The complaint must allege that the injurious act was intentionally and purposely done, with the intent willfully and purposely to inflict the injury complained of,⁶² and, unless it avers such conscious knowledge or facts showing it, the mere fact that the acts are charged to have been willfully, wantonly, or recklessly done is not sufficient.⁶³ Ordinarily a general averment that defendant's servants by certain acts or omissions wantonly, willfully, or recklessly caused the injury is sufficient, without setting out the facts showing the wantonness, willfulness, or recklessness.⁶⁴ While plaintiff may allege simple negligence and willful misconduct in separate counts,⁶⁵ but not in the same count,⁶⁶ where the gist of the action is willful or wanton injury, an allegation of simple negligence alone is insufficient.⁶⁷

Gross negligence. Where it is necessary that the act or omission causing the injury be willful or wanton in order to constitute gross negligence, an allegation that defendant carelessly and negligently did or omitted to do an act causing the injury is not a charge of gross negligence, but ordinary negligence.⁶⁸

Under the rules of pleading in actions for negligent injuries generally, the plaintiff need not negative matters of defense in his pleading, and in most, but not all, jurisdictions, need not negative contributory negligence.

Matters of defense to be alleged by defendant need not be negated by plaintiff in his complaint, declaration, or petition.⁶⁹

Contributory negligence. Except where the complaint states a cause of action under the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine,⁷⁰ a complaint is ordinarily bad if it discloses contributory negligence on the part of the person injured.⁷¹ As discussed in Negligence § 194, there is a conflict of authority as to whether plaintiff must negative contributory negligence on his part in his complaint. While in some jurisdictions, plaintiff must allege freedom from contributory negligence,⁷² the general rule, sometimes by virtue of statute,⁷³ is to the effect that the fact of contributory negligence is an affirmative defense and need not be negated by plaintiff in his original pleading.⁷⁴

§ 303. Plea or Answer and Other Pleadings

The general rules of pleading in civil actions, and particularly actions for negligence, govern the plea or answer of the defendant in actions for injuries from operation of street railroads.

Under the general rules governing pleas and answers in civil actions generally, and in particular those in actions for negligence, a plea that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence,⁷⁵ or that he was a trespasser,⁷⁶ may be interposed to a complaint averring simple negligence; but, where contributory negligence is not a defense, it is no answer.⁷⁷ Thus, a plea setting up contributory negligence is an insufficient answer to a complaint charging defendant with wantonness or willfulness,⁷⁸ or with the power, notwithstanding plaintiff's negligence, to avoid the injury after discovering plaintiff's peril.⁷⁹ Where plaintiff attempted to cross in front of an approaching car knowing that he was in peril in doing so, a plea setting out that plaintiff, fully appreciating his peril, attempted to cross,⁸⁰ or that his contributory negligence continued up to, and concurred in, the injury,⁸¹ is sufficient.

Necessity of special plea. In jurisdictions where in contributory negligence of the person injured must be specially pleaded, such a plea must be sufficient.⁸² A plea must aver the facts and circumstances constituting the contributory negligence relied on and not the mere conclusion of the pleader,⁸³ and, while the word "negligently" is not necessary where the facts alleged show negligence,⁸⁴ the employment of the word "negligently" or other similar conclusion-expressing words will not serve as a substitute for allegations of facts and circumstances.⁸⁵ A plea setting up contributory negligence, which attributes to the person injured conduct which may or may not have been negligent, and which fails to aver that such conduct was negligent, except as a conclusion of law resulting necessarily from the act or omission charged, is insufficient and subject to demurrer,⁸⁶ as is also a plea which does not with certainty impute to the person injured the omission of any duty or the commission of any act, negligent or otherwise.⁸⁷ An averment that defendant owned and operated a street railroad can be reached only by a special plea denying that defendant owned or operated the street railroad.⁸⁸

Causal connection. The plea must set out facts showing a causal connection between the contributory negligence and the injury.⁸⁹

Imputed negligence. In accordance with general rules, a plea or answer which seeks to avoid liability because of the negligence of a third person must allege facts which in law would allow such person's negligence to be imputed to plaintiff.⁹⁰

Failure to stop, look, and listen. A plea setting up the failure of a driver to stop, to look, and to listen at a crossing must allege facts from which it can be concluded that a duty arose to stop, look, and listen.⁹¹

Amendment. Where it is not necessary for plaintiff to file a notice of the injury within a specified time, an application by defendant on the trial for leave to amend its answer to plead a failure to file notice is properly denied.⁹²

Replication or reply. Under the general rules relating to such pleadings, a replication or reply may and should be made to affirmative averments in defendant's plea or answer.⁹³ Subject to such general rules, a replication is to be construed in the light of, and with respect to, the other pleadings, and particularly to the allegations of the plea it purports to answer.⁹⁴ A replication is insufficient

where it does not aver that defendant's failure to observe a statutory duty was the proximate cause of the injury.⁹⁵

§ 304. Issues, Proof, and Variance

- a. Issues
- b. Proof
- c. Variance

a. Issues

In an action against a street railroad company, only such matters as are put in issue by the pleadings may be adjudicated or made the basis of recovery.

In accordance with, and subject to, general rules in civil actions generally, and in particular those relating to actions for negligence, in an action to recover damages caused by the operation of a street railroad only such matters may be adjudicated or made a basis of recovery as are put in issue by the pleadings.⁹⁷ Thus, plaintiff or complainant, in such an action, may rely for recovery only on such matters of negligence as are put in issue by his pleadings.⁹⁸ Plaintiff cannot state a particular cause of action and recover on an entirely different ground of liability.⁹⁹ Under a general allegation of negligence plaintiff may recover on proof of any acts or omissions constituting negligence which caused the injury,¹ but, where specific acts of negligence are alleged, recovery can be had only on the grounds alleged.² Although a matter is not alleged by plaintiff, a material averment of defense may be deemed controverted by plaintiff to raise an issue without express denial.³

Defenses. Defendant may rely on only such matters as are properly put in issue by the pleadings.⁴ It cannot rely on a defense which might have been put in issue only by special pleading, but was not so pleaded.⁵ A plea of the general issue or general denial puts in issue all the material allegations of the complaint or petition,⁶ but does not put in issue mere matters of inducement,⁷ such as the ownership and operation of the car causing the injury.⁸

- (1) Matters to be proved
- (2) Evidence admissible under pleadings

(1) Matters to Be Proved

Plaintiff, in order to recover for injuries resulting from the operation of a street railroad, must prove as alleged every material allegation of his complaint, declaration or petition, where such matters are in issue, and have not been admitted.

In order that plaintiff or complainant may recover,

In action for injuries resulting when motorman, allegedly after becoming aware of pedestrian's peril, failed to use all means at his command to prevent streetcar from colliding with pedestrian, plea in short by consent included defense based on "subsequent contributory negligence" or want of care on part of pedestrian after discovery of his own peril.—McKinney v. in an action for injuries against a street railroad company, every material allegation of negligence or of other matters, contained in the complaint or petition, and necessary to establish his cause of action, must be proved as alleged;⁹ but it is not necessary to prove allegations which are mere surplusage and not essential to the cause of action;¹⁰ and defendant is not required to prove allegations in its answer which are not matters of affirmative defense.¹¹

Facts alleged, but not put in issue, need not be proved.¹²

Matters admitted by pleadings. In accordance with general rules, a fact essential to a cause of action or defense in a suit against a street railroad need not be proved if admitted by the pleadings of the adverse party,¹³ but, unless such fact is expressly or impliedly admitted, it must be proved.¹⁴

Specific allegations. In accordance with general rules, where the petition or complaint alleges specific acts of negligence as a ground of recovery, such acts must be proved as pleaded.¹⁵

Several acts or omissions alleged. Where plaintiff alleges several separate and distinct acts or omissions not dependent on each other, every act alleged need not be proved, but it is sufficient to prove one act or omission sufficient to cause, and which did cause, the injury independent of any other.¹⁶

Causal connection. Not only must plaintiff plead that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause, but it must also be shown that the negligence proved was connected with the injury sustained as the proximate, or proximately contributing, cause thereof.¹⁷

Ownership, operation, or control. The ownership, operation, or control of the road or car causing the injury must be shown to be in defendant,¹⁸ unless the answer admits it,¹⁹ or the matter is not in issue,²⁰ or the ownership of the car is not material,²¹ or unless it otherwise appears from the evidence that the tracks or cars were in the possession of defendant and operated by it.²²

(2) Evidence Admissible under Pleadings

Any evidence, otherwise admissible, may be introduced if it tends to support or controvert issues made by the pleadings.

In an action for injuries arising from the operation of a street railroad, any evidence, not otherwise inadmissible, may be introduced on behalf of plaintiff if it tends to support or controvert an issue made by the pleadings,²³ but evidence as to matters not alleged or on which there is no issue is inadmissible.²⁴ Thus an ordinance,²⁵ such as a speed²⁶ or vigilant watch²⁷ ordinance, is inadmissible to show defendant's negligence unless pleaded. However such evidence is admissible as is an incident of the cause of action for the purpose of showing the situation and surrounding circumstances at the time and place of accident, and, therefore, as tending to prove or disprove matters in issue,²⁸ such as freedom from contributory negligence.²⁹ So, also, an ordinance³⁰ or rule or custom of the company³¹ may be admissible, although not pleaded where the ordinance or rule is introduced as tending to prove the negligence alleged and not as a ground of negligence. Evidence may be admissible on new matter put in issue by defendant's answer, which is deemed controverted by plaintiff without express denial.³²

Under general and specific allegations. Where defendant's negligence is alleged in general terms, plaintiff is not confined in his evidence to any one particular act of negligence, and evidence of any fact which is a circumstance tending to show the negligence alleged is admissible, although no mention is made of such fact in the pleading.³³ Thus, under a general allegation of negligence, proof may be made and a recovery sustained under the last clear chance doctrine.³⁴ Where specific acts of negligence are alleged, the proof must be confined to the acts alleged,³⁵ and evidence of other acts of negligence is not admissible unless the complaint is amended to cover them.³⁶

Under plea of contributory negligence, plaintiff may avail himself of any facts which tend to disprove such negligence,³⁷ even though not alleged in his declaration or complaint.³⁸

On behalf of defendant, any proper evidence is admissible under a general denial which tends to disprove the matters put in issue by plaintiff's allegations.³⁹ Thus, evidence is admissible under a general denial or general issue to show that defendant is not responsible for the cause of the injury,⁴⁰ or that it was caused by the injured person's own contributory negligence,⁴¹ or to show that he was intoxicated at the time as tending to impair his credibility.⁴² Under a plea of contributory negligence, any evidence tending to show the existence of such negligence at the time is admissible,⁴³ and, under such a plea, defendant may show as evidence of negligence that plaintiff's automobile was not legally registered.⁴⁴ Matters of affirmative defense cannot be proved unless pleaded.⁴⁵

c. Variance

As in other civil actions the proof must conform substantially to the pleadings.

In accordance with, and subject to, rules in civil actions generally, the proof, in an action for injuries against a street railroad company, must substantially correspond with the pleadings,⁴⁶ and, unless cured by an amendment,⁴⁷ if there is a material variance therein, it is fatal to a recovery⁴⁸ or matter of defense.⁴⁹ However, if the proof substantially supports the pleading, any variance therein which does not materially affect the cause of action and by which defendant is not misled to his prejudice may be disregarded as immaterial.⁵⁰

§ 305. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

General rules as to presumptions and burden of proof apply in an action for injuries caused by the operation of a street railroad; the burden is on the plaintiff to establish the material facts of his cause of action and on the defendant to establish affirmative defenses.

General rules relating to presumptions and burden of proof, particularly those which apply in actions for negligence in general, ordinarily govern and control the presumptions and burden of proof in an action for injuries caused by the operation of a street railroad.⁵¹ Accordingly, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to establish the material facts which constitute his alleged cause of action.⁵² Thus, it is incumbent on plaintiff to prove the place of the injury,⁵³ that defendant or his servants were guilty of negligence or other misconduct as alleged, which was the proximate cause of the injury complained of, as discussed infra § 306, and that defendant owned, managed, or controlled the car which caused the injury.⁵⁴

In accordance with general rules, one presumption cannot be based on another presumption;⁵⁵ and there can be no presumption as against facts which are proved.⁵⁶ In the absence of evidence that the place of injury was on defendant's exclusive property it will be presumed that the injured person was not a trespasser,⁵⁷ but one injured on subway tracks a substantial distance from the station is presumed to be a trespasser.⁵⁸ In the absence of special evidence it may be presumed that streetcar tracks are laid in a public street,⁵⁹ and that the occupation and use of the street by the railroad are lawful;⁶⁰ and there is no presumption that the prosecution of a work by a corporation in the public streets is unauthorized and its employees trespassers.⁶¹ There is a strong presumption that cars operated on the tracks of a street railway are being run by the authority of the company, and not by strangers or by employees acting beyond the scope of their duties.⁶²

The company will be presumed to have knowledge of a defect which had existed for several days;⁶³ but there is no presumption of law that a street rail-

One is presumed to have seen what he would have seen had he looked.⁶⁶

Affirmative defenses. The burden is on defendant to establish matters of affirmative defense.⁶⁷ Thus, where the failure of a driver to register his automobile is an affirmative defense, the burden is on defendant to prove the failure to register.⁶⁸ Where defendant claims an exemption from liability because of the operation of the street railroad by a licensee, it has the burden of proving such exemption.⁶⁹

§ 306. — Negligence of Defendant

- a. In general
- b. Happening of accident; res ipsa loquitur

a. In General

In an action for injuries caused by the operation of a street railroad, the plaintiff has the burden of proving the defendant's negligence, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury; and, where he relies on the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine, he has the burden of establishing the conditions required for the application of the doctrine.

In an action for injuries caused by the operation of a street railroad, plaintiff has the burden of proving the negligence of defendant relied on,⁷⁰ and the burden is not on defendant to prove itself free from negligence.⁷¹ Plaintiff is not relieved of the burden of proving defendant's negligence, although a presumption of due care on the part of plaintiff is recognized.⁷² In accordance with general rules, the burden is on defendant to introduce evidence sufficient to overcome or rebut plaintiff's showing where he makes out a prima facie case of negligence on the part of defendant,⁷³ or, in some jurisdictions, where defendant has suffered a default;⁷⁴ but the burden of proof of his right to recover remains on plaintiff.⁷⁵

As a general rule there is no presumption that defendant was guilty of negligence,⁷⁶ but, on the contrary, in accordance with general principles, in the absence of contrary evidence it will be presumed that defendant acted with due care.⁷⁷ In the absence of evidence to the contrary it may be presumed that a streetcar was traveling at a lawful rate of speed,⁷⁸ that defendant had equipped its cars with proper appliances in compliance with the law,⁷⁹ and that a motorman was looking ahead and performing his duty,⁸⁰ especially at night.⁸¹ It will not be presumed that the lights on the car were not burning⁸² or that defendant violated an ordinance.⁸³

Cause of injury. In accordance with general rules, plaintiff must show that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.⁸⁵ While the cause of the injury may be inferred from circumstances, as discussed infra § 321, ordinarily it will not be presumed that defendant's misconduct was the cause of the injury.⁸⁶ Where the negligence of defendant consists of the violation of a statute or ordinance, there is no presumption that such violation caused the injury,⁸⁷ and plaintiff has the burden of proving that the violation relied on was the proximate cause of his injury.⁸⁸

Power of defendant to avoid injury; last clear chance. Where plaintiff relies on the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine, he has the burden of establishing the conditions required for the application of the doctrine.⁸⁹ Accordingly, he has the burden of showing that the circumstances in which the injury occurred were such that defendant, after perceiving plaintiff's peril, had the last clear chance to avoid the accident and could by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided injuring him.⁹⁰ In jurisdictions where the application of the doctrine is dependent on the actual knowledge of defendant as distinguished from knowledge implied from the duty to discover, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show the fact of actual discovery of plaintiff's peril.⁹¹ In jurisdictions where actual knowledge is not necessary, plaintiff must at least prove that defendant ought to have known of plaintiff's peril and could by the exercise of reasonable care have avoided the injury.⁹²

In ascertaining whether a motorman had actual knowledge of the peril of an injured person if it appears that he had an unobstructed view of the track, it may be presumed from his duty to keep a lookout that he, in fact, saw the injured person in a position of peril,⁹³ but this presumption may be rebutted.⁹⁴ No presumption exists that a motorman realized the peril in time to avoid injury,⁹⁵ but it is presumed that the motorman acted to avoid injury as soon as he realized the peril.⁹⁶

Willful or wanton injury. Where plaintiff relies for a recovery on a willful or wanton injury, he has the burden of proving the essential elements to constitute willful or wanton injury.⁹⁷ Thus, he has the burden of proving defendant's actual knowledge of plaintiff's peril⁹⁸ and that defendant, on discovery of the peril, had the time and opportunity to use means to avert the accident.⁹⁹ A motorman approaching a busy crossing will be presumed to be conscious of the surroundings.¹ Since a street railroad is under no duty to exercise active vigilance to look out for trespassers on its cars or tracks, no presumption arises that the motorman was looking ahead,² but the actual knowledge necessary to authorize recovery may be inferred from proof that the motorman was looking ahead.³

Ordinarily mere proof of an accident or injury in connection with the operation of a street railroad is not a sufficient basis for a presumption of the railroad's negligence unless the circumstances are such as to make the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applicable.

In accordance with general rules, in the absence of statute mere proof of an accident or injury in connection with the operation of a street railroad ordinarily is not a sufficient basis for a presumption of negligence on the part of defendant.⁴ The mere fact that the person injured may be presumed to have exercised due care raises no presumption of defendant's negligence from the mere happening of the accident.⁵

Res ipsa loquitur. In accordance with, and subject to, rules considered in Negligence § 220 (2) et seq, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies where the accident or injury is such that in the ordinary course of events it does not occur if the person controlling the instrumentality uses proper care, and proof of the happening of the accident in the absence of evidence to the contrary is presumptive evidence of negligence on the part of defendant.⁶ Whether the doctrine should be held applicable to a given state of facts is a question not always easy of determination.⁷ While in some decisions the maxim may be limited to cases where there is a contractual relationship,⁸ generally a contractual relationship such as passenger and carrier is not necessary.⁹

The doctrine has been held applicable where a person has been injured by reason of the derailment of a car,¹⁰ the deflection of a car by a split switch,¹¹ by being struck or caught by a trolley rope,¹² pole,¹³

Injury to minor

The occurrence of an accident resulting in injury to a minor would not of itself charge street railway, which had legal right and was under public duty to maintain tracks and operate cars for carriage of passengers on certain street, with liability, unless it failed in some duty it owed the minor.—Armstrong v. Spokane United Rys., 78 P.2d 176, 194 Wash. 353.

In Pennsylvania

(1) The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is said to apply only in cases where there is an absolute duty or a contractual relationship with the street railroad.—Kepner v. Harrisburg Traction Co., 38 A. 416, 183 Pa. 24—60 C.J. p 561 note 67.

(2) Thus, in actions for injuries to persons other than passengers through the operation of a street railroad, it would appear that mere proof of the fact of the accident or injury without more does not raise a presumption of negligence in any case.—Benson v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 93 A. 1009, 248 Pa. 302—McCoy v. George, 27 A.2d 658, 149 Pa.Super. 630—60 C.J. p 561 note 66.

(3) However, proof of the injury coupled with other evidence, although circumstantial, may be sufficient to warrant a presumption of negligence.—Dougherty v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 101 A. 344, 257 Pa. 118—60 C.J. p 562 note 69.

(4) Negligence was presumed where the injury occurred by reason of the deflection of a car by a split switch.—Geiser v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 72 A. 351, 223 Pa. 170—60 C.J. p 562 note 70.

adelphia Rapid Transit Co., 94 A. 924, 249 Pa. 364—60 C.J. p 562 note 71.

Degree of care

Whether plaintiff tripping over object dangling from rear of streetcar, after alighting therefrom, was passenger at time of accident was material only as regards degree of care owing by street railroad, not as regards applicability of res ipsa loquitur doctrine.—Gallagher v. or wire,¹⁴ or by objects projecting from the car,¹⁵ or by the escape of electricity from the rails,¹⁶ or by the fall of a bolt or bar or other object from an elevated structure,¹⁷ or where a car is running along the street with no one in control.¹⁸

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has been held not to apply where the circumstances of the accident do not warrant an inference of negligence,¹⁹ where the proof leaves room for a different presumption or inference,²⁰ where it is shown that the accident might have happened as the result of one of several causes,²¹ where there is no want of evidence as to the cause of the accident and the manner in which it occurred,²² where the injury was caused by the unlawful act of a passenger,²³ or where the railroad did not have complete control over the situation,²⁴ as where the object producing the injury was not in the custody or under control of defendant;²⁵ nor does it apply ordinarily, where there is merely a showing of a collision.²⁶

Where the proof of the accident gives rise to the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the burden is on defendant to rebut the presumption of negligence²⁷ but the application of the doctrine does not operate to shift the burden of proof.²⁸

Statutory provisions. By statute in some jurisdictions on proof by plaintiff of a loss or damage to person or property incurred or sustained by reason of the operation of a street railroad, a presumption arises that the injury was caused by the negligence of defendant and the burden of proving freedom from negligence is on defendant.²⁹ Statutes pertaining to such presumption in actions for injuries against railroads have been held applicable,³⁰ and inapplicable,³¹ in actions for injuries due to the operation of a street railroad. The statutes are inapplicable where plaintiff fails to show that the injury was caused by defendant.³² The statutes are said to be a concrete and modified expression of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur,³³ and to the extent that the statutes raise a presumption in cases other than those of injuries to passengers they are in derogation of the common law³⁴ and must be strictly construed.³⁵ When the fact of an injury in such a manner and at such a place as contemplated by the statute is proved, the statute operates to give rise to a presumption of negligence on the part of defendant,³⁶ to the extent of all acts of negligence alleged,³⁷ and to cast on it the burden of rebutting such presumption by proving that it was not negligent.³⁸ The presumption of negligence ceases when facts are shown explaining how the injury occurred,³⁹ or when defendant has made it appear that it has exercised ordinary and reasonable care and diligence.⁴⁰

In actions for injuries from the operations of a street railroad, the burden of proof on the issue of contributory negligence is, in some jurisdictions, on the defendant; in others, on the plaintiff.

The sharp conflict, discussed in Negligence § 210, as to where the burden of proof lies on the issue of contributory negligence also exists in actions for injuries arising from the operation of street railroads, and in a majority of jurisdictions, it is held, sometimes by reason of statute, that the burden is on defendant to prove plaintiff's contributory negligence⁴¹ and that such negligence proximately and directly contributed to the injury,⁴² provided plaintiff has established a prima facie case without disclosing contributory negligence.⁴³ The minority view is that the burden is on plaintiff to establish his freedom from contributory negligence,⁴⁴ except, under statute in actions for wrongful death.⁴⁵ The rules discussed in Negligence § 218 with respect to the presumptions of care and capacity on the part of an infant as regards the issue of contributory negligence have been applied where an infant is injured by a street railroad.⁴⁶

A statute changing the rule as to burden of proof does not change the substantive law of contributory negligence.⁴⁷ Where defendant, having the burden of proof, makes out a prima facie case of contributory negligence, the burden is on plaintiff to rebut defendant's case,⁴⁸ but the burden of proof of contributory negligence does not shift.⁴⁹ While plaintiff's reliance on the last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine may dispense with the burden of proving freedom from contributory negligence, the burden is not dispensed with where there is no evidence showing that the doctrine is applicable.⁵⁰

ordinance or statute, in jurisdictions where contributory negligence is an affirmative defense, the burden is on defendant to show the violation of the statute or ordinance.⁵¹ It will be presumed that the violation of a statute or ordinance is contributory negligence,⁵² but not that such violation was a proximate cause of the accident.⁵³

It will be presumed that a pedestrian knows that a streetcar in rounding a curve will overhang at the rear end,⁵⁴ and that it is dangerous to go on the tracks when cars are passing.⁵⁵ In the absence of contrary evidence it will be presumed that a moving automobile is under control.⁵⁶ There is no presumption that a driver of an automobile is going to drive so as to collide with a car⁵⁷ and it will not be presumed that a guest in an automobile struck by a streetcar was negligent.⁵⁸ A presumption of negligence in leaving a team unattended in a street is merely a presumption of fact.⁵⁹ In the absence of statute or ordinance, a driver is not presumed to be negligent merely because he drives on the left side of the road.⁶⁰ Where plaintiff does not testify that he was familiar with a speed ordinance and relied on its observance by defendant, it cannot be presumed that he relied on its observance so as to excuse his contributory negligence.⁶¹

Presumption of due care generally. In accordance with the rules considered generally in Negligence § 206, in some jurisdictions there is a presumption that the person injured was in the exercise of due care,⁶² especially in the case of death.⁶³ The presumption is a rebuttable one,⁶⁴ and has no application where the facts as to how the injury occurred are shown.⁶⁵ Where plaintiff must prove freedom from contributory negligence, a presumption of due care does not arise⁶⁶ even in cases of wrongful death.⁶⁷

In some jurisdictions, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it may be presumed that a person about to cross a street railroad track was duly careful of his own safety,⁶⁸ especially in cases of death.⁶⁹ According to other decisions it cannot be assumed that a person looked before or after entering a position of peril on the tracks.⁷⁰ The mere proof that plaintiff's hearing was good does not warrant the inference that he was listening for an approaching car,⁷¹ and the mere fact that he could have looked affords no basis for inferring

that he did look.⁷² When, from the physical facts of the case the person injured would have seen a car had he looked it is presumed either that he failed to look or, having looked failed to exercise the proper care to avoid injury.⁷³ Where defendant's car was being operated during darkness at a dangerous rate of speed without a lighted headlight and without any warning of its approach, it will not be presumed that a driver of a vehicle failed to look, or having looked, failed to heed.⁷⁴

Happening of accident. The happening of the accident ordinarily does not alone make out a case of contributory negligence⁷⁵ or freedom therefrom.⁷⁶ The mere fact that there is a collision between a streetcar and a vehicle raises no presumption of contributory negligence,⁷⁷ but, where a collision occurs between a car and a vehicle progressing side by side with a space between them, the driver of the vehicle may be presumed negligent.⁷⁸

Imputed negligence. Where defendant alleges that the injury was occasioned by plaintiff's servant so as to impute the servant's negligence to his master, the burden is on defendant to prove the relationship of master and servant.⁷⁹ It has been held that a statute making contributory negligence an affirmative defense as to which defendant has the burden of proof relates only to the personal conduct of plaintiff so that plaintiff has the burden of proving that his servants or others whose negligence is imputable to him were not guilty of negligence contributing to the injury.⁸⁰ So, too, it has been held that a statutory presumption of due care extends no further than to the person injured and is inapplicable as to servants of the injured person.⁸¹

§ 308. Admissibility of Evidence

General rules as to the competency, relevancy, and materiality of evidence govern and control, as far as applicable, in actions for damages sustained through the operation of a street railroad.

General rules as to the competency, relevancy, and materiality of evidence, particularly those applying in actions for negligence in general, govern and control, as far as applicable, in actions for damages sustained through the operation of a street railroad.⁸² Subject to these rules evidence is admissible on behalf of plaintiff or defendant of all facts and circumstances which tend to prove or disprove plaintiff's cause of action,⁸³ or defendant's matters of defense,⁸⁴ but evidence which is irrelevant, immaterial, or incompetent is inadmissible on behalf of plaintiff⁸⁵ or defendant.⁸⁶ In an action against a street railroad for assault, evidence that the railroad defended its employee in a criminal action is relevant and admissible on the issue whether the employee was acting in the scope of his employment in assaulting plaintiff.⁸⁷

Res gestæ; declarations. General rules relating to the admissibility of evidence as part of the res gestæ apply in actions for injuries from the operation of a street railroad.⁸⁸ Declarations or statements of a motorman made immediately be-

§ 309. — Negligence of Defendant

- a. In general
- b. Municipal ordinances and regulations
- c. Rules of company
- d. Defects in tracks, streets, cars, or other equipment
- e. Operation of cars
- f. Speed
- g. Incompetency or insufficiency of employees

a. In General

Any evidence which is competent, relevant, and material is admissible on the issue of negligence.

In accordance with general rules any evidence which is competent, relevant, and material is admissible on the issue of negligence,⁹³ and evidence which is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial is not admissible.⁹⁴

Opinion evidence. General rules as to the exclusion of opinion evidence apply in an action for injuries from the operation of a street railroad.⁹⁵ While a motorman must state what he did to stop his car rather than that he stopped it as soon as he could,⁹⁶ he may state that he could not have done anything further than he did to prevent the injury.⁹⁷ Testimony that there were no obstacles in the way to prevent a motorman seeing the person on or near the track is not a mere expression of opinion.⁹⁸ Where there is evidence that a car was stopped within a certain space after the accident, there is no need of expert testimony to show within what distance the car could have been stopped.⁹⁹

Other accidents or acts. Ordinarily, evidence of other accidents or acts is inadmissible to show negligence on the part of the company at the time and place of the injury,¹ unless the conditions and circumstances surrounding the different acts or occasions are shown to be the same and in the same locality.²

Where a violation of a valid ordinance tends to show negligence on the part of the street railroad, the ordinance is admissible in evidence.

Where a violation of an ordinance, together with other evidence, tends to show negligence on the part of a street railroad, the ordinance is admissible,³ but an ordinance which is irrelevant or immaterial is inadmissible.⁴ Where the right to enact an ordinance is withdrawn from a city, and the power vested in a public utility commission so that the ordinance is of no effect,⁵ or an ordinance is superseded by a later ordinance,⁶ the ordinance is inadmissible. An ordinance passed after the accident has been held inadmissible.⁷ Since, ordinarily on the acceptance by a street railroad of its charter or grant of franchise, it is bound to observe ordinances without expressly accepting them, for the purpose of offering an ordinance in evidence, it is not necessary to prove that it was accepted.⁸

Equipment of cars. Ordinances requiring street-cars to be equipped with certain appliances are admissible where with other testimony they tend to prove negligence of the street railroad,⁹ but such an ordinance is not admissible where it is irrelevant and immaterial.¹⁰

Tracks and repair of street. Where the evidence discloses that plaintiff's injury resulted from the failure of a street railroad to maintain its tracks in proper condition, an ordinance or contract with the city relating to the maintenance of tracks is admissible.¹¹ Likewise, where the injury results from a failure to keep the street in repair as required by ordinance, the ordinance is admissible,¹² but, where plaintiff had knowledge of the defect so that defendant's negligence is not the cause of the injury, the exclusion of an ordinance is proper.¹³

Speed ordinance. Although a speed ordinance prescribes only a penalty for a violation of its provisions,¹⁴ where the evidence establishes that a streetcar was exceeding the speed limit, a speed ordinance limiting the speed of streetcars within the corporate limits is admissible in evidence in connection with other testimony to show that defendant's operation of the car at the time and place of the injury was negligent.¹⁵ In the absence of evidence fixing the rate of speed of defendant's car involved in the accident, it is proper to exclude a city ordinance regulating the speed of streetcars within the corporate limits.¹⁶ A speed ordinance, in order to be admissible, must be applicable¹⁷ as to the place of the injury¹⁸ and as to the person injured.¹⁹

c. Rules of Company

There is conflict as to whether the rules of the street railroad company are admissible to show its negligence. Rules have been held not admissible to disprove negligence.

According to some authorities, the rules of the company regulating its employees in the operation of its cars are inadmissible to prove the company's negligence,²⁰ at least where the rules were not known to plaintiff,²¹ or where they impose a higher duty on the employees than is required by law.²² According to other authorities, the rules of the company, when relevant and applicable, are admissible,²³ at least where plaintiff had knowledge of them,²⁴ even if the rules are intended solely for the benefit of the company's employees.²⁵ The admission of such rules as evidence has been held to be similar to the admission of an ordinance regulating the operation of street railroads.²⁶ A rule of the company is inadmissible when it is inapplicable under the evidence in the case.²⁷ On behalf of the company to disprove its negligence such rules have been held inadmissible.²⁸ Thus on behalf of the company a rule as to the speed allowed is inadmissible to prove that the company was not negligent,²⁹ but the admission of a rule requiring employees to sound the gong at crossings has been held not to constitute reversible error.³⁰

Any evidence, otherwise competent, which tends to show negligence in the construction or maintenance of the streets, tracks, cars, or other equipment is admissible.

As bearing on the question of the company's negligence in the construction and maintenance of the street, tracks, or other equipment, evidence not otherwise incompetent is admissible of any fact or circumstance which tends to show that the company failed to exercise due care and diligence.³¹ Where the evidence shows that no change occurred in the condition before or after the accident,³² evidence of the condition before³³ or after³⁴ the accident is admissible to show the existence of a dangerous condition at the time of the accident. The admissibility of the evidence in each case depends on the degree of probability afforded by it that the condition shown before the injury continued at the time of the injury,³⁵ and is a matter resting largely within the discretion of the court.³⁶

For the purpose of showing the defective condition at the time and place of the injury, evidence is ordinarily inadmissible of the defective condition at other times and places,³⁷ or of precautions taken by the company after the accident.³⁸ On the question of negligent or defective construction or maintenance, evidence is admissible to show that structures of a similar class are or are not constructed in a similar manner,³⁹ and that certain methods could have been adopted to eliminate the defective condition existing.⁴⁰ While evidence of accidents to others at the place has been held inadmissible,⁴¹ it has also been held that such evidence is admissible to show the existence of a dangerous condition.⁴²

As tending to disprove negligence evidence is admissible on behalf of defendant to show that other persons or vehicles were constantly crossing the track safely at the place and about the time of the accident,⁴³ but evidence that the company never heard of anyone walking off an elevated railroad platform is inadmissible where it is not shown that there were other unguarded platforms such as the one in question.⁴⁴ On behalf of the company to show that the road was constructed to the satisfaction of the road commissioner as required by statute, testimony of an assistant commissioner that he saw the work done and was satisfied is admissible to show that the work was done to the commissioner's satisfaction.⁴⁵

Notice of defect. Evidence is admissible to show that the company had actual or constructive notice of the defect.⁴⁶ For the purpose of showing that the company had notice of the defect and to charge it with a failure to repair, evidence is admissible to show the condition of the track or street before the accident,⁴⁷ that the defect was brought to the attention of the company,⁴⁸ that on prior occasions the defect or obstruction caused injuries to others,⁴⁹ and the condition of other equipment of the same nature near the place of injury.⁵⁰

Condition or equipment of cars. As tending to show negligence, evidence, if otherwise competent, is admissible with respect to the equipment and condition thereof on the car at the time and place of the injury,⁵¹ but evidence which is immaterial is properly excluded.⁵² Where the evidence shows that no change occurred in the condition before or after the accident, in view of the presumption of the persistence of conditions of a continuing nature once shown to exist, evidence is admissible as to the defective condition of the equipment of the car causing the injury before and after the accident,⁵³ or that the car was dismantled shortly after the accident, and the equipment sold as old iron,⁵⁴ but evidence that the equipment on other cars was defective or out of repair is not admissible.⁵⁵ While evidence that other cars in common use are better equipped has been held inadmissible,⁵⁶ it has been held that for the purpose of determining whether a car was properly equipped at the time of the injury evidence may be admitted as to whether a certain improvement had extensively been known and used prior to the time of the accident.⁵⁷

Any evidence, otherwise competent, which tends to show that the street railroad company was negligent in the operation of its cars, is ordinarily admissible.

As bearing on the question of the company's negligence in the operation of its cars, evidence, not otherwise incompetent, is admissible of any fact or circumstance which tends to show that the company failed to exercise due care and diligence,⁵⁸ but evidence which is irrelevant and immaterial is inadmissible.⁵⁹ As bearing on the question of the manner in which a car should have been operated at the time and place of the injury, evidence is admissible as to the condition of the brakes⁶⁰ and the tracks.⁶¹ For such purpose evidence is also admissible as to the condition of the locus in quo,⁶² the amount of travel there,⁶³ that it was a thickly populated neighborhood,⁶⁴ and that children customarily were there.⁶⁵ Where a collision occurs with a vehicle driving on the track, for the purpose of showing the care required in the operation of the cars at such point, evidence is admissible that the public under certain circumstances were in the habit of driving on the track.⁶⁶ Evidence of the populousness of the territory surrounding and beyond the scene of the injury is inadmissible.⁶⁷ In order to demonstrate that the car in question could not be safely run at as high a rate of speed as others better equipped, it has been held competent to show that other cars differently equipped could be stopped in a shorter distance and time.⁶⁸

of negligent operation at the time and place of the injury.⁶⁹ Thus, for the purpose of showing negligence in the operation of a car evidence is admissible as to the customary mode of running cars on double tracks,⁷⁰ and the custom of stopping cars at certain times and places.⁷¹ The mere fact that cars on prior occasions stopped at a crossing to permit plaintiff's steam roller to pass is insufficient to charge the company with notice so as to require it to operate its cars at a decreased speed at such point.⁷² On behalf of the company to show that it was not negligent at the time and place of the injury, evidence is admissible as to customary conduct of automobile drivers at intersections.⁷³

Other accidents and acts. Ordinarily evidence of other accidents or acts of negligence in the operation of cars at other places or on other occasions, previous or subsequent, is inadmissible to show negligence on the part of the company in the operation of its car at the time and place of the injury,⁷⁴ unless the conditions and circumstances surrounding the different acts or occasions are shown to be the same and in the same locality,⁷⁵ or the acts are continuous in their nature and are closely connected with the acts complained of in point of time, place, and circumstances,⁷⁶ but evidence of similar occurrences is admissible to prove the company's negligence in the operation of its car when it appears that the essential physical conditions are similar.⁷⁷ Thus it has been held that, as tending to show negligence on the part of an employee on a car, evidence is admissible as to his conduct just prior to the accident;⁷⁸ but on the other hand it has been held that evidence of his acts after the accident is inadmissible.⁷⁹ On behalf of defendant testimony of the motorman as to acts immediately preceding the accident is admissible,⁸⁰ but evidence that a motorman has been careful on other similar occasions is ordinarily inadmissible.⁸¹

Arrest or prosecution. While the admission of evidence of the arrest of a motorman at the time of the accident has both been held proper,⁸² and improper,⁸³ at least it is error to refuse to permit evidence to be given as to the cause and reason of the arrest.⁸⁴ Evidence of the motorman's arrest some time after the accident has been held inadmissible as part of the res gestae.⁸⁵ The fact that plaintiff unsuccessfully prosecuted the motorman has been held immaterial.⁸⁶

Intoxication. Evidence that a motorman was intoxicated is admissible to show that the car was operated in a reckless manner.⁸⁷ While evidence which is too remote is inadmissible to prove intoxication at the time and place of the injury,⁸⁸ as bearing on the question of the motorman's intoxication at the time of the accident, evidence has been held admissible to show that he had a drink just before starting on the trip,⁸⁹ and that during the trip his conduct was such as to indicate his condition.⁹⁰

Length of service and discharge. On the question of a motorman's negligence in the operation of a car, the length of time he has been employed as a motorman has been variously held admissible,⁹¹ and inadmissible.⁹² Evidence that following the injury the motorman was discharged is inadmissible on the question of the company's negligence.⁹³

Lights and warnings. On the question of the company's negligence in the operation of the car causing the injury, it may be shown that the motorman failed to sound the warning signal,⁹⁴ but evidence that the motorman,⁹⁵ or another motorman,⁹⁶ failed to give proper warning at another time and place is inadmissible. A witness testifying that no warning was given may further testify that there was no reason to have prevented him hearing a warning if it had been given.⁹⁷ On the question of the company's negligence in running a car at night without lights, evidence that the public were in the habit of driving on the track is admissible.⁹⁸

Vigilance of motorman. The negligence of a motorman in the operation of a car may be shown by his failure to keep a vigilant watch for persons or property on or near the tracks.⁹⁹ On the question of a motorman's failure to keep a vigilant watch, evidence that a short distance from the accident he was not looking ahead is admissible.¹ The failure of the motorman to see what was in his range of vision may be considered as evidence of a failure to keep a vigilant lookout.²

Evidence is admissible with respect to the speed at which the car which caused the injury was running and the control under which it was at the time of the accident.

As tending to show negligence in the operation of a streetcar, evidence is admissible in respect of the speed at which the car which caused the injury was running and the control under which it was at the time and place of the accident.³ On the issue of the speed of the car at the time of the accident, evidence is admissible as to its speed at, or immediately before, the accident.⁴ Particular matters of which evidence may be received on the question of speed include the distance which the car traveled before coming to a stop after the accident,⁵ its speed prior to the accident where the evidence also shows that such rate of speed continued up to the time of the accident,⁶ the distance a vehicle was carried after being struck,⁷ the condition, after the collision, of the vehicle which was struck,⁸ the nature and extent of the injuries,⁹ and the space within which the car could have been stopped.¹⁰ For the purpose of showing the average rate of speed as a basis of comparison with the speed at the time of the accident,¹¹ evidence of the length of the car's trip and the scheduled time for making such a trip is admissible.¹² Evidence that the car was late has been held both admissible¹³ and inadmissible.¹⁴ The length of time elapsing between the impact of the car against the injured person and the application of the brakes has been held immaterial.¹⁵ Evidence that the cars customarily stopped a block or more away from the scene of the accident is inadmissible to show the rate of speed at the time of the accident.¹⁶ In justification, defendant cannot show that other cars traveled at the same rate of speed.¹⁷

Customary speed. While in some jurisdictions evidence of the speed at which defendant habitually runs its cars at or near the place of the accident is admissible,¹⁸ in other jurisdictions evidence of the speed of other cars at the place of the accident,¹⁹ or elsewhere,²⁰ or evidence of the speed of the car at the same place some time after the accident,²¹ is not admissible.

An opinion or estimate of the speed of a streetcar may be admissible,²² but an opinion or estimate of the speed of a streetcar is inadmissible where it is based, not on observation, but merely on the results of the collision.²³ The fact that the witness is some distance from the accident does not render his estimate inadmissible,²⁴ but merely affects the weight of the evidence.²⁵

Form of statement. It is improper, it has been held, to permit a witness to state whether a car was running "slowly or fast,"²⁶ or "coming down at a terrible speed."²⁷

g. Incompetency or Insufficiency of Employees

Evidence as to the insufficiency or incompetency of the street railroad's employees may be admissible.

For the purpose of showing negligence on the part of the company in the operation of the car which caused the injury, evidence is admissible with other testimony that there were an insufficient number of employees in charge of such car,²⁸ but unless it is shown that a conductor is necessary in the proper management of the car, evidence that no conductor was on the car is inadmissible.²⁹ As bearing on a driver's or motorman's condition or incompetency at the time of the accident, evidence is admissible to show his competency at the time he was hired;³⁰ that he had a drink just before starting on the trip,³¹ or that he was intoxicated;³² but evidence is inadmissible that he had some trouble on another line in managing his car,³³ or had previously been concerned with an accident,³⁴ or as to the number of hours each day other employees were required to work.³⁵ For the purpose of showing the general incompetency of a motorman, evidence of different specific acts of negligence by him is admissible.³⁶

Reputation. Evidence of the reputation of a motorman in charge of the car for negligence has been held inadmissible.³⁷

Evidence of any material or relevant facts, not otherwise incompetent, which tends to establish or disprove contributory negligence, is admissible.

On the issue of contributory negligence, evidence of any material or relevant facts, not otherwise incompetent, which tends to establish or disprove contributory negligence on the part of the person injured is admissible,³⁸ but evidence which is irrelevant and immaterial is inadmissible.³⁹

Persons on or near tracks or premises. On the question of contributory negligence of a person on or near the track, evidence is admissible as to the conditions prevailing at the time of the injury.⁴⁰ In order to establish the contributory negligence of the injured person, it is competent to show that he stepped on to the track a short distance from the approaching car,⁴¹ that on crossing a street he unnecessarily exposed himself to danger,⁴² that the crossing was one not customarily used,⁴³ and that he crossed at a place which was not a crosswalk.⁴⁴ Where an injury results to a bystander as a result of a collision between a vehicle and streetcar, the contributory negligence of the driver of the vehicle is immaterial.⁴⁵

On behalf of the injured person to show due care evidence is admissible that he was blinded by the glare of the car's headlight,⁴⁶ that he was working near the track as he had a right to do,⁴⁷ that the public customarily crossed the track or street at the locus in quo,⁴⁸ and of the company's usual custom in running its cars in the street where the accident occurred.⁴⁹ Evidence that the person killed in an accident was a careful and cautious man is inadmissible, where there were several eye witnesses to the occurrence.⁵⁰

Drivers of vehicles. As tending to show contributory negligence of a driver of a vehicle on or near the tracks, evidence is admissible to show that the person charged with negligence was a reckless driver,⁵¹ but evidence which is irrelevant and immaterial is properly excluded.⁵² Where the street on which the accident occurred is not obstructed or it is not probable that driving thereon will result in injury, evidence that the injured person could have driven on another street safely is inad-

Suicide

In action by pedestrian against street railroad for personal injuries evidence that pedestrian had had a quarrel at home on the afternoon of the accident, and that he admitted that he "had attempted to end it all" was admissible.—Perry v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 76 N.E.2d 653, 322 Mass. 206.

missible.⁵³ With respect to the distance which a car might have been seen so as to determine the injured person's care in crossing in front of it, evidence of witnesses, under less favorable circumstances, is admissible.⁵⁴ On behalf of the injured person to show due care, evidence is admissible that the motorman failed to sound a warning,⁵⁵ that the gong was defective,⁵⁶ or that the driver heard no warning;⁵⁷ that he expected the streetcar to stop;⁵⁸ that the condition of the weather necessitated the use of side curtains;⁵⁹ that it was necessary to pull out on to the tracks to avoid other vehicles;⁶⁰ and that the condition of the street outside the tracks was such as necessitated driving on the tracks.⁶¹

In passing on the conduct of the injured person, his knowledge of the company's methods of operating its cars,⁶² as to the rate of speed⁶³ and warning,⁶⁴ is admissible. Evidence of the injured person's knowledge of the distance in which a car can be stopped has been held both admissible,⁶⁵ and inadmissible.⁶⁶ Where it is customary for a watchman to give vehicles warnings when cars are backed out, the failure of the watchman to give such warning is relevant on the question of due care.⁶⁷

Evidence of a custom existing at the time of the accident allowing funeral processions to pass is admissible,⁶⁸ but the custom must be shown to have existed at the time of the accident.⁶⁹ Where the injured person sustains injuries by striking trolley posts in the nighttime, evidence by other witnesses that under substantially like circumstances they were blinded by lights was admissible.⁷⁰

Occupants of vehicles. For the purpose of showing the careless character of the driver, so as to show the care exercised by a guest, evidence of the habits of the driver with respect to driving carelessly is admissible.⁷¹ Evidence that a fireman had previously ridden on a fire truck at a similar rate of speed,⁷² or that he knew when he boarded the truck that it would proceed at any particular rate of speed⁷³ has been held inadmissible to show his contributory negligence. On behalf of an occupant of a vehicle to disprove contributory negligence, evidence is admissible that the driver was driving carefully,⁷⁴ that the motorman failed to sound a warning,⁷⁵ and that streetcars customarily slackened their speed at crossings;⁷⁶ but evidence that the

Knowledge of car's approach

In action for injuries to driver of automobile which collided with defendant's streetcar proceeding in opposite direction, where questions of plaintiff's contributory negligence, as well as defendant's primary negligence, were involved, evidence of streetcar motorman's failure to sound bell was admissible, although plaintiff admittedly became conscious of car's approach when it was a block away.—Bowman v. Custom driver was a careful driver has been held both admissible⁷⁷ and inadmissible.⁷⁸

Persons under disability. It is competent, as tending to show contributory negligence, for defendant to show that the person injured was intoxicated at the time of the accident.⁷⁹ On the issue of intoxication at the time of the injury, evidence has been held admissible to show that shortly before the accident the injured person took a drink⁸⁰ and was boisterous;⁸¹ that he was intoxicated on repeated occasions before and after the injury,⁸² that he was convicted for intoxication at the time of the injury,⁸³ and for the same offense on other occasions.⁸⁴

On the question of contributory negligence of a child, evidence has been held inadmissible to show that he was accustomed to play in the street unattended,⁸⁵ or that he noticed the manner of operation of cars on previous occasions.⁸⁶

Ordinances. On the question of the contributory negligence of the injured person, an ordinance, together with other testimony, is admissible on behalf of plaintiff⁸⁷ or defendant;⁸⁸ but, where there is no evidence that the ordinance was violated⁸⁹ or where the ordinance is inapplicable⁹⁰ as to the person injured,⁹¹ it is inadmissible.

Rules and regulations. Where it appears that the injured person knew of the particular rule of the street railroad company⁹² it is admissible to show his due care.⁹³ On behalf of the street railroad, in an action for injuries sustained by a trainman in a collision between a railroad train and a streetcar, evidence of the rules of the railroad company has been held inadmissible to show the contributory negligence of the trainman.⁹⁴ Rules of a fire department have been held both admissible⁹⁵ and inadmissible⁹⁶ on the question of due care of a fireman. It has been held that the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission relating to the operation of motor vehicles engaged in interstate commerce are not admissible in an action for damages to a motor vehicle engaged in interstate commerce because of its collision with a streetcar.⁹⁷

§ 311. — Last Clear Chance

Under the humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine, evidence is admissible as to when the motorman first saw the injured person in a position of peril.

On the issue whether defendant by proper care and caution could have avoided the accident after he knew or was chargeable with knowledge of the injured person's perilous condition, evidence is admissible to show when the motorman first saw the injured person in a perilous condition.⁹⁸ The failure of the street railroad to sound a warning is admissible to establish liability under the humanitarian doctrine, even though the injured person admittedly had knowledge of the car's approach.⁹⁹ It has been held that evidence of plaintiff's contributory negligence in placing himself in a position of danger is not admissible in an action based on the humanitarian rule.¹ Evidence to support a theory which is purely conjectural is not admissible.² With respect to a trespasser on the tracks, evidence of the frequency of the use of a crossing has been held not to be material to charge the motorman with knowledge of his presence.³ For the purpose of showing in what distance and time a motorman could have stopped the car so as to avoid injuring a trespasser on the tracks, evidence of the distance and time within which other cars differently equipped could be stopped is inadmissible.⁴

§ 312. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence

In actions for damages resulting from the operation of a street railroad, the matters essential to the cause of action, such as the defendant's negligence, must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.

General rules relating to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions, particularly those applicable in actions based on negligence, apply in actions for damages resulting from the operation of a street railroad.⁵ Accordingly, each and every fact essential to the cause of action must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.⁶ Thus, where such facts are in issue, the place of the accident⁷ and the injured person's position at the time⁸ must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.

Affirmative defenses. Defendant must prove matters of affirmative defense by a preponderance of the evidence.⁹

Right to go on or near tracks. Under general rules the right of the injured person to be on or near the tracks must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence.¹⁰

Negligence of defendant generally. Plaintiff, having the burden of proof, must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, the negligence of defendant,¹¹ and that the injury could have been reasonably anticipated by defendant.¹² The existence of negligence, contributory negligence, or proximate cause need not be established by direct and positive evidence, but it may be inferred from circumstances adduced in evidence sufficient to authorize a finding of negligence;¹³ but these facts must themselves be shown by direct testimony, and cannot be inferred from other facts.¹⁴ The inference must be based on something other than mere conjecture, speculation, or probability.¹⁵ Since negligence may be established without showing a violation of a statute or ordinance, the evidence may be sufficient without proof of such a violation.¹⁶ Where the burden is shifted to defendant by plaintiff's prima facie case, in order to sustain a finding of due care on its part defendant must introduce evidence sufficient to rebut plaintiff's case.¹⁷

§ 313. — Relation of Defendant to Cause of Injury

The relation of the street railroad company to the cause of the injury must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.

In order to sustain a recovery plaintiff, by a preponderance of the evidence, must prove the relation of the company to the cause of injury,¹⁸ and that defendant at the time and place of the injury owned or operated the road or car,¹⁹ or other agency causing the injury.²⁰ Direct and positive evidence, however, of ownership or operation is not essential, but it may be shown by proof of facts from which the ownership or operation at the time of the accident may reasonably be inferred.²¹

§ 314. — Acts of Employees

It must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the person causing the injury was an employee of the defendant acting within the scope of his employment.

Plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the person causing the injury was an employee of defendant at the time and place of the injury,²² and that the act causing the injury was within the scope of his employment.²³

§ 315. — Defects in Tracks, Street, or Equipment

Where a defective condition of the tracks, street, or equipment is relied on to establish the defendant's negligence, the defective condition must be proved by sufficient evidence.

Under general rules, in order to prove the negligence of defendant with respect to the condition of its tracks or equipment or of the street which it is under a duty to keep in repair, plaintiff must show by sufficient evidence that at the time and place of the injury a defective condition existed.²⁴ Thus, the evidence must be sufficient as to the condition of the wires,²⁵ tracks,²⁶ or street,²⁷ and as to the company's actual or constructive notice of the defect.²⁸ Where plaintiff is injured in a collision due to obstructions in the street, a prima facie case of negligence is made out when it is shown that the tracks projected above the street which caused the vehicle to skid.²⁹ In an action against an elevated railroad company, evidence that the injuries were occasioned by the fall of an iron plate with part of a bolt, due to the breaking of the bolt while passing under the structure, is sufficient to make out a prima facie case.³⁰ So, also, a case of negligence with respect to the equipment of defendant's locomotives on its elevated railroad is established by evidence of the fall therefrom of coals and cinders of unusual sizes or quantities at the time of the accident, together with proof that proper appliances could have been used to prevent the fall of such coals and cinders,³¹ although the condition of the locomotive which caused the injury is not shown.³² Where plaintiff makes out a prima facie case of negligence on the part of defendant the evidence of defendant must be sufficient to rebut the presumption of negligence.³³

Condition or equipment of cars. In order to prove negligence on the part of defendant with respect to the condition or equipment of its cars, plaintiff must show by a preponderance of the evidence that at the time and place of the injury the car did not have the necessary equipment or that the equipment was in a defective condition.³⁴ Thus, the evidence must be sufficient as to the condition of the brakes,³⁵ fenders,³⁶ the reverser,³⁷ or headlights.³⁸ Where plaintiff makes a prima facie case of negligence on the part of defendant, under general rules, in order to sustain a finding of due care on its part defendant must introduce evidence sufficient to rebut plaintiff's case.³⁹

Violation of statute or ordinance. Where plaintiff relies on the violation of an ordinance or statute, the evidence must be sufficient to prove a violation,⁴⁰ and this rule applies where the violation relied on is of an ordinance or statute with respect to the equipment of cars.⁴¹

Negligence in the operation of a street railroad car must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.

Where plaintiff relies on the negligence of defendant in the operation of its car he must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that at the time and place of the injury defendant was negligent.⁴²

Right of way

In determining legal sufficiency and weight of evidence of negligence, as affected by right of way at stop signs at highway intersections, courts

Negligence in the operation of the cars may be established by circumstantial evidence.⁴³

Positive and negative testimony. Under general rules the positive testimony of witnesses who were in a position to have heard a bell or gong, if it had been sounded, that they did not hear it is sufficient to justify a finding that it was not sounded;⁴⁴ but such testimony is of little or no weight when given by witnesses who had no means of knowledge or who paid no attention to the occurrence, and may be too insubstantial to offer any opposition to positive contradictory testimony.⁴⁵

On approaching street crossing. Where the negligence relied on consists of a failure to operate the car with due care on approaching a street crossing, the evidence must be sufficient to prove such negligence.⁴⁶ Thus, the evidence must be sufficient as to the motorman's failure to have the car under control,⁴⁷ to keep a vigilant watch,⁴⁸ to have a light on the car at the proper time,⁴⁹ to sound a warning,⁵⁰ to slacken speed,⁵¹ or to stop the car.⁵²

On approaching person on or near track. Where the negligence relied on consists of a failure to operate the car with due care on approaching a person on or near the track, the evidence must be sufficient to prove such negligence.⁵³ Thus, the evidence must be sufficient as to the motorman's failure to keep the car under control,⁵⁴ to keep a vigilant watch,⁵⁵ to give a proper warning of the approach and juries cannot ignore differences between streetcars and automobiles, but cannot determine in advance consequences of such differences in any particular case.—Fox v. Baltimore Transit Co., 71 A.2d 470, 194 Md. 403.

Adoption of statement

A streetcar motorman's testimony that police officer's written memorandum as to what witness told such officer after car struck a man lying on track was correct, "as much as I know of it," cannot be taken as adoption of witness' alleged prior declaration to officer that witness saw the man when ninety feet from him as true, where witness' previous testimony left his meaning conjectural.—*Desmond v. of the car,⁵⁶ to reduce the speed of the car,⁵⁷ or to attempt to stop the car in order to avoid the injury.⁵⁸ Where plaintiff relies on the violation of an ordinance or statute as the ground of negligence on approaching a person on or near the track, the evidence must be sufficient to prove such violation.⁵⁹

On approaching child or infirm or helpless person. Where the negligence relied on consists of a failure to operate the car with due care on approaching a child or an infirm or helpless person, the evidence must be sufficient to prove such negligence.⁶⁰ Thus, the evidence must be sufficient as to the motorman's failure to keep the car under such control as to stop it in time to avoid injuring a child;⁶¹ to anticipate that children will run on or near the track;⁶² to give a child warning of the approach of the car;⁶³ to keep a vigilant watch for children on or near the track,⁶⁴ or for persons lying helpless on the track;⁶⁵ and to stop the car in time to avoid injury to a child,⁶⁶ or infirm or helpless person.⁶⁷ To run down a small child in an unobstructed street in daylight is evidence of negligence⁶⁸ unless the child suddenly darts into the path of the car.⁶⁹ Where the negligence relied on by plaintiff consists of a violation of a statute or ordinance, the evidence must be sufficient to prove the violation of the ordinance or statute,⁷⁰ and this is true where the negligence relied on consisted of a violation of a rule of the company.⁷¹

On approaching vehicles on or near track. Where the negligence relied on consists of a failure to operate the car with due care on approaching a vehicle on or near the track, the evidence must be sufficient to prove such negligence.⁷²

Vehicle crossing tracks. Where a vehicle is struck while crossing the track the evidence must be sufficient to prove negligence in the operation of the car.⁷³ Thus, the evidence must be sufficient as to the motorman's failure to operate the car at a lawful speed,⁷⁴ to keep a vigilant watch,⁷⁵ to sound a warning,⁷⁶ to keep the car under control,⁷⁷ to keep the headlight burning,⁷⁸ or to stop the car in time to avoid injury.⁷⁹

Vehicle at rest on or near track. On the question of the negligent operation of a streetcar causing a collision with a vehicle stalled or at rest on or in close proximity to the track the evidence must be sufficient⁸⁰ to show that the motorman operated the car at an excessive speed,⁸¹ or that he failed to keep a vigilant watch,⁸² or to stop the car in time

Vehicle traveling in same direction. Where a vehicle is proceeding along or near a track in the same direction as an oncoming streetcar, the evidence of defendant's negligence must be sufficient⁸⁴ as to the motorman's failure to keep a vigilant watch,⁸⁵ to slacken his speed,⁸⁶ to give a warning of the approach of the car,⁸⁷ or to have a headlight burning on the car.⁸⁸ Where a motorman runs down a vehicle proceeding in the same direction it has been held to constitute prima facie negligence⁸⁹ or at least evidence of negligence⁹⁰ which is rarely capable of explanation.⁹¹

Vehicle traveling in opposite direction. Where a vehicle is proceeding in a direction opposite to that of a streetcar, the evidence must be sufficient to show negligence⁹² as to the motorman's failure to operate the car at a proper speed,⁹³ to have a light burning,⁹⁴ or to stop the car in time to avoid the injury.⁹⁵

may be established by sufficient proof that the car causing the injury was traveling at an excessive rate of speed.⁹⁶ Where the negligence charged is as to the speed of the car, in the absence of statute or municipal regulation, it is not sufficient to support a finding of negligence to show merely the speed of the car,⁹⁷ for, since the rate of speed is negligent only with relation to existing circumstances, the evidence must be such as to show that the particular rate of speed with relation to the circumstances existing at the time and place of the injury was negligent.⁹⁸ Thus, the evidence must show that the condition of the street was such that the particular speed was excessive,⁹⁹ as that the street was a popular one,¹ or that the place of the accident was used by the public as a safety zone.² The fact that the car on passing creates a current of air is not evidence of excessive speed.³

Where there is evidence that the injury resulted from the violation of a municipal speed ordinance, a finding of actionable negligence may be sustained.⁴ Where a violation of a rule of the company as to speed is relied on as a ground of negligence, the evidence must be sufficient to show a violation of the rule.⁵ Since it may be negligent to run a streetcar at an excessive rate of speed irrespective of a speed ordinance, the evidence may be sufficient without proof that a speed ordinance was violated.⁶

The finding of excessive speed at the time and place of the injury may be sustained where the physical facts show its existence.⁷ Thus, the finding of excessive speed may be sustained where the evidence shows that the vehicle struck was badly demolished,⁸ or that the injured person⁹ or the vehicle¹⁰ was carried or thrust forward a great distance. Evidence that the streetcar traveled a considerable distance after the collision may justify a finding of excessive speed,¹¹ but the locality of the accident¹² and the condition of the track¹³ and of the car after the collision¹⁴ are to be considered. A finding against an excessive rate of speed may be sustained where the evidence shows that the vehicle was carried but a very short distance¹⁵ or the car stopped within a short distance from the scene of the accident,¹⁶ or the passengers on the streetcar were not jarred by the impact,¹⁷ or the extent of injuries was small.¹⁸ Where the injured person was crossing the track, a finding of excessive speed of the car may be sustained on evidence of the speed at which the injured person was traveling and the relative positions of the car and such person immediately before the accident.¹⁹

In order to prove an excessive rate of speed at the time and place of the injury testimony of a witness is of little probative value that the streetcar was traveling "fast,"²⁰ "pretty fast,"²¹ "very fast,"²² or similar expressions.²³

Injury to animals unattended or running at large. Where the ground of negligence consists of a failure to use due care in the operation of a car so as to avoid injury to animals unattended or running at large, the evidence must be sufficient to prove such negligence.²⁴

Injuries resulting from fright of animals. Where plaintiff's ground of negligence consists of defendant's failure to operate its car so as not to frighten an animal, the evidence must be sufficient to prove such negligence.²⁵ Thus, the evidence must be sufficient to show that the motorman negligently frightened an animal by sounding his whistle or gong,²⁶ or that after discovering that an animal is frightened the motorman failed to reduce the speed of²⁷ or stop²⁸ the car.

§ 317. — Power of Defendant to Avoid Injury; Last Clear Chance

The conditions necessary for the application of the humanitarian or last clear chance doctrine must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.

Where plaintiff relies on the last clear chance, discovered peril, or humanitarian doctrine, the conditions necessary for the application of the doctrine must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.²⁹ Thus, the evidence must be sufficient as to the fact that the person injured was in a position of peril,³⁰ as to the injured person's obliviousness to the peril,³¹ and as to the duty of the street-car employees, after the peril was or should have been discovered, to use all reasonable means to warn the person of the peril,³² and to avert the accident,³³ as by stopping the car.³⁴ Where defendant claims that plaintiff's negligence continued up to the time of the injury so as to constitute a proximate cause and to make the doctrine of last clear chance inapplicable, the evidence must be sufficient to prove that the person injured on discovering the danger failed to exercise reasonable care to avoid injury.³⁵

Knowledge of peril. The evidence must be sufficient to prove actual knowledge of the peril of the injured person³⁶ or, in some jurisdictions, that defendant's employees knew or could or should have discovered the peril of the person injured in time to avoid the injury.³⁷ In order to establish defendant's knowledge of the injured person's position of danger positive evidence is not essential,³⁸ but the fact may be shown by circumstantial evidence³⁹ which must be of such strength and character as to warrant an inference or reasonable probability, from the facts proved, that defendant's employees had actual knowledge.⁴⁰ It has been held that the jury need not believe the motorman's testimony that he did not see the injured person,⁴¹ but it has also been held that, where a motorman testifies that he was on the lookout and did not see the injured person, it must be accepted as a fact, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the person injured could not have been seen in time to have stopped the car.⁴²

§ 318. — Willful or Wanton Injury and Gross Negligence

Willful or wanton negligence must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.

Where plaintiff relies for a recovery on a willful or wanton injury, he must prove by a preponderance of the evidence either an actual intent to injure or such a conscious or intentional disregard of the rights of others as to warrant a conclusion that an injury was intended.⁴³ Thus, the evidence must be sufficient to show that the car was propelled at a reckless speed⁴⁴ or that on discovery of the injured person's peril the motorman willfully failed to stop the car in time to avoid the injury.⁴⁵ Mere proof that a car is propelled at a high rate of speed does not alone establish willful negligence,⁴⁶ and mere violation of a speed ordinance does not show gross negligence.⁴⁷ Evidence of simple negligence is insufficient to support a finding of willful or wanton misconduct.⁴⁸

Licensees. Where a licensee is injured by reason of the operation of a street railroad, the evidence must be sufficient to support a recovery.⁴⁹

Trespassers. Where the person injured was a trespasser on the car, the evidence must be sufficient to show willfulness or wantonness in order to show liability for the injury.⁵⁰

§ 319. — Contributory Negligence

In an action for injuries arising from the operation of a street railroad, general rules apply as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence on the issue of contributory negligence.

In actions for injuries arising from the operation of a street railroad, general rules apply as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence on the issue of contributory negligence.⁵¹ A preponderance of the evidence is required to establish the existence of contributory negligence⁵² or freedom therefrom.⁵³

As in the case of proving the existence of defendant's negligence, direct evidence is not necessary to establish either contributory negligence⁵⁴ or the absence thereof.⁵⁵ The burden is sustained by plaintiff only by proving that he has made such use of his faculties as an ordinarily prudent man would have done under similar circumstances.⁵⁶ The burden is not sustained by an inference of careful conduct where it is merely conjectural, and is no more probable than an inference of carelessness,⁵⁷ but the inference must be the only one which can fairly and reasonably be drawn from the facts.⁵⁸ Proof of facts tending to show that the injured person entered upon the tracks without taking any precaution for his own safety makes out a prima facie case of contributory negligence.⁵⁹ Failure to have an automobile registered at the time of the accident has been held to be evidence of negligence in operating an automobile,⁶⁰ but it is not conclusive.⁶¹

The presumption of due care on the part of plaintiff, where applicable, will, in the absence of other evidence, justify a finding that he proceeded with due care and caution,⁶² but the presumption, being rebuttable, is of no avail where the evidence shows that the injured person was guilty of contributory negligence.⁶³

Reliance on precautions by defendant. The above rules apply as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence of contributory negligence in reliance on the assumption of proper precautions being taken by a street railroad company.⁶⁴

Person working in street. The evidence must be sufficient to show that a person working in the street was contributorily negligent.⁶⁵

Persons injured because of obstructions in street. On the question of contributory negligence of a person injured because of obstructions in the street, the evidence must be sufficient to show contributory negligence⁶⁶ or freedom therefrom.⁶⁷

or due care⁶⁹ on the part of the person injured while walking or driving across railroad tracks. Thus the evidence must be sufficient to prove contributory negligence⁷⁰ or freedom therefrom⁷¹ as to the distance of the streetcar when the injured person crossed the track; or contributory negligence⁷² or due care⁷³ in walking or driving on the track in front of an approaching car.

Failure to stop, look, and listen. The failure of a person to look and listen before crossing a track may be strong evidence of negligence.⁷⁴ Where the particular ground of contributory negligence relied on consists of the failure of a driver or pedestrian to stop, look, and listen before crossing, the evidence must be sufficient to show contributory negligence⁷⁵ or freedom therefrom.⁷⁶ Where it appears that the car was so close and visible just before the accident that it must have been seen if the person injured had looked properly, evidence that he did look and did not see it is incredible, as a matter of law, as being in contradiction of matters of common knowledge or the laws of nature.⁷⁷

Person driving or walking on or near track. Where the contributory negligence relied on consists of the failure of a person driving or walking on or near the track to use due care, under general rules the evidence must be sufficient to show such negligence⁷⁸ or due care.⁷⁹ Thus, for injuries occasioned by the operation of a streetcar, the evidence must be sufficient to show the contributory negligence⁸⁰ or due care⁸¹ of the driver of a vehicle proceeding in the same direction on, astride,

§ 321. — Proximate Cause of Injury

In an action for injuries from the operation of a street railroad, it must be established by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.

In order to sustain a recovery, plaintiff must, under general rules, show by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant's negligent act or omission was the proximate cause of the injury complained of.⁸⁸ This fact may be shown by circumstantial evidence,⁸⁹ which must be of such strength and character as to warrant an inference or reasonable probability, from the facts proved, that defendant's negligence caused the injury;⁹⁰ and such evidence is not sufficient if it merely raises a surmise or conjecture that such was the fact.⁹¹

The rules as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to proximate cause apply in actions for injuries by reason of negligence with respect to the condition of the street⁹² or tracks,⁹³ the condition or equipment of the car,⁹⁴ or with respect to the management and operation of the car⁹⁵ as to speed,⁹⁶ warnings,⁹⁷ or duty to keep a vigilant watch.⁹⁸

Violation of statute or ordinance. Plaintiff must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the violation was the proximate cause of the injury.⁹⁹ Thus, the causal connection must be sufficiently proved between the injury and a violation of an ordinance with respect to speed,¹ or the duty to keep a vigilant watch,² to equip the car with a fender,³ or to keep the street in repair.⁴

Violation of rules of company. Where plaintiff relies on the failure of an employee to adhere to a rule of the company the evidence must be sufficient to show that such violation was the proximate cause of the injury.⁵

Contributory negligence. On the question of plaintiff's negligence the evidence must be sufficient to show that such negligence was a proximate cause of the injury complained of.⁶ Thus the evidence must be sufficient to show that the contributory negligence of the injured person was the proximate cause when the injury results from walking⁷ or driving⁸ across the track. Where the evidence shows that a collision occurred by reason of plaintiff being in a place of threatened danger, to which his own negligence has exposed him, in the absence of rebutting evidence the court may infer that the injury received was the proximate result of plaintiff's want of due care.⁹

§ 322. Questions of Law and Fact

In an action for injuries caused by the management or operation of a street railroad, questions of law are ordinarily to be determined by the court, and questions of fact by the jury under proper instructions.

In an action for injuries caused by the management or operation of a street railroad, as in other civil actions, questions of law are ordinarily to be determined by the court and questions of fact are to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court.¹⁰ Thus, if there is any evidence from which the jury might justifiably find the existence or nonexistence of facts in issue, and the evidence is disputed, or if undisputed is such that reasonable minds might arrive at different conclusions therefrom, the issues should be submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions from the court;¹¹ but, where there is no evidence on an issue of fact, or the evidence of its existence or nonexistence is so slight that a finding thereof would not be sustained, or is conclusive of its existence or nonexistence, the question becomes one of law for the court and should not be submitted to the jury.¹²

Accordingly, provided the evidence is sufficient to establish at least a prima facie case for plaintiff,¹³ or more than a scintilla to sustain his theory,¹⁴ even though the weight thereof seems to favor the defendant,¹⁵ the issues should be submitted to the jury where it is conflicting or not conclusive as to whether the street railroad company was guilty of

If motor vehicle was operated contrary to law, because temporary number plate was used without authority, it cannot be ruled as matter of law that momentary acts of a rider on a truck in attempting to crank the truck at a time of imminent peril because of a streetcar, in order to get it off the track, made him an operator within statute.—*Labrecque v. negligence or the person injured was guilty of contributory negligence.¹⁶ Under such state of the evidence the case should not be taken from the jury by a dismissal¹⁷ or nonsuit,¹⁸ or by sustaining a demurrer to the evidence,¹⁹ or directing a verdict.²⁰

Where, however, the evidence on such issues is undisputed, or is such that reasonable minds can arrive at but one conclusion therefrom, the case should not be submitted to the jury,²¹ but the court alone should dispose of it, as by a dismissal or nonsuit,²² or by directing a verdict.²³

Effect and reasonableness of regulations. It is a question of law for the court to determine the legal force or effect of a statutory or municipal regulation as to the operation or equipment of a street railroad or the speed of a car²⁴ or the reasonableness or unreasonableness thereof,²⁵ unless it depends, in the opinion of the court, on the existence of particular facts which are disputed.²⁶

Employee acting for company. In an action for damages for assault and battery, the question whether an employee of a street railway company was acting for the company at the time of the altercation is for the jury on conflicting evidence.²⁷

§ 323. — Companies and Persons Liable

On conflicting evidence it is for the jury to determine whether the defendant company was operating the car, or created the dangerous condition, by which the injuries were caused or from which the injuries resulted.

Where the facts are in dispute, or where more than one inference may be drawn therefrom, in an action against a street railroad company for injuries resulting from the management or operation of its road, it is a question of fact for the jury to determine whether the company was operating the car by which the injuries were caused,²⁸ or whether the dangerous condition from which the injuries resulted was created by the company.²⁹ Where, however, there is no evidence tending to show, or from which a legitimate inference may be drawn, that defendant company is the one liable for the injury, the case should not be submitted to the jury.³⁰

In actions for injuries resulting from the management or operation of a street railroad, questions of negligence are for the jury to determine if there is any legally sufficient evidence to go to the jury and it is conflicting or such that reasonable minds might arrive at different conclusions therefrom.

Questions of negligence, in actions for injuries resulting from the management or operation of a street railroad, are primarily for the jury;³¹ and if there is any legally sufficient evidence to go to the jury, and it is conflicting or such that reasonable minds might arrive at different conclusions therefrom, it is a question for the jury, and should be submitted to them, as to whether or not under all the circumstances the commission or omission of particular acts by the street railroad company in the operation of its road or car at the time and place of the accident was negligence as to the person injured thereby,³² and the court should not dispose of such a case, without the intervention of a jury, by granting a nonsuit,³³ or dismissal,³⁴ or by directing a verdict.³⁵

Where, however, the evidence is legally insufficient or is undisputed and is such that reasonable minds can arrive at but one conclusion therefrom, with respect to the company's negligence, such question is for the court and should not be submitted to the jury;³⁶ but the court should itself dispose of the case by granting or directing a nonsuit,³⁷ or by a dismissal,³⁸ or by directing a verdict.³⁹

b. Defects in Tracks, Structures, Cars, Equipment, or Street

Except where the evidence is legally insufficient to justify submission or is undisputed, it is for the jury to determine whether a street railroad company was guilty of negligence in failing to maintain its tracks, structures, cars, or equipment, or the streets on which its tracks are laid, in proper and safe condition.

Except where the evidence is legally insufficient to justify submission,⁴⁰ or is undisputed and such that but one conclusion can reasonably be drawn

Humanitarian or primary negligence

In action for death of pedestrian against street railroad company where plaintiff pleaded that pedestrian was struck by both company's streetcar and an automobile after streetcar motorman saw pedestrian's perilous position in crossing street, and evidence showed a case of humanitarian negligence based on pedestrian's position of imminent peril because of streetcar instead of a case of primary negligence in forcing pedestrian to remain in path of automobile, failure to submit issue therefrom,⁴¹ it is for the jury, in an action for injuries resulting therefrom, to determine whether or not a street railroad company was guilty of negligence in failing to maintain its track or the street in proper and safe condition, or in permitting a defect therein or obstruction thereof,⁴² or in improperly constructing or maintaining a trolley wire, pole, or other structure.⁴³

Equipment and condition of car. It is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether the street railroad company was negligent with respect to the equipment of the car,⁴⁴ as whether it was properly equipped with appliances for controlling or stopping it,⁴⁵ or with a suitable and proper fender,⁴⁶ or whether the operation of the car without a fender constituted negligence as to the injured person,⁴⁷ and whether the car and its equipment were in proper and safe condition at the time of the accident;⁴⁸ but, in the absence of any evidence of defects in the construction, maintenance, or equipment of a car the matter should not be submitted to the jury.⁴⁹

c. Operation of Car in General

It is ordinarily for the jury, on conflicting evidence, to determine where or how an accident involving the operation of a streetcar occurred, and whether such operation was negligent.

d. Movement, Speed, and Control of Car

In an action for injuries resulting from the operation of a streetcar, it is generally for the jury to determine whether, under the circumstances of the case, the railway company was negligent with respect to the movement, speed, and control of the car.

In general, in an action for injuries resulting from the operation of a streetcar, it is for the jury to determine whether, under the facts and circumstances existing at the time and place of the accident, it was negligence to start or move the car,⁵⁵ or allow it to proceed,⁵⁶ or to stop it suddenly,⁵⁷ and whether the car was under proper control,⁵⁸ or was being operated in a negligent and improper manner,⁵⁹ or was running at an excessive speed,⁶⁰ such as at a rate in excess of that prescribed by statute or ordinance,⁶¹ or at a rate inconsistent with the customary use of the street by others,⁶² or constituting negligence under the existing circumstances,⁶³ as where the car was at or approaching a street intersection or public crossing.⁶⁴ Evidence that the car ran on a considerable distance after the accident without stopping is ordinarily sufficient to take the issue to the jury.⁶⁵

Submission of the question to the jury is not proper, however, where there is no evidence of the speed at which the car was running,⁶⁶ or no evidence that it was running at an excessive speed⁶⁷ or that the speed in any way contributed to the accident,⁶⁸ or that the car was not under proper control,⁶⁹ or that the motorman of the trolley car was in any way negligent,⁷⁰ or where the evidence is purely conjectural.⁷¹

e. Maintaining Lookout

It is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether the motorman operating a streetcar kept a proper lookout under the existing circumstances or was negligent in that respect.

In an action against a street railroad company for injuries growing out of the operation of its car, it is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether or not the motorman operating such car kept a proper lookout for persons, animals or vehicles in peril on or near the track, or was negligent in that respect, under the circumstances existing at the time and place of the accident,⁷² as at a street intersection⁷³ or railroad crossing,⁷⁴ and whether or not such person, animal, or vehicle was seen by him in time to avoid the accident,⁷⁵ or by the exercise of proper vigilance could have been seen, in time to avoid the accident.⁷⁶ It is also ordinarily a question for the jury as to whether it is actionable negligence for the conductor of a car to fail promptly to notify the motorman of danger to a person or animal on or near the track, which the conductor has discovered.⁷⁷ Failure to see a pedestrian on the street is usually evidence of negligence requiring the issue to be submitted to the jury.⁷⁸

The submission of the question to the jury is not necessary or proper, however, where there is no evidence as to the vigilance or lack of it of the persons in charge of the car,⁷⁹ or the evidence is undisputed and is such that but one reasonable conclusion can be drawn therefrom,⁸⁰ or is insufficient to show any lack of vigilance;⁸¹ and where plaintiff was contributorily negligent as a matter of law, the issue of primary negligence of defendant in violating a vigilant watch ordinance was not a submissible issue and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in withdrawing the issue from the jury.⁸²

f. Lights, Signals, and Warnings

Whether there was negligence on the part of the street railway company with respect to lights, signals, and warnings is a question for the jury on conflicting evidence.

Where the evidence is conflicting, or is such that reasonable minds might draw different conclusions therefrom, it is ordinarily the province of the jury, in an action for injuries resulting from the operation of a streetcar, to determine whether, at and just before the time of the accident, the car carried proper and sufficient lights, under the circumstances then existing, for illuminating the tracks and warning the public of its approach, or its operation without them was negligent,⁸³ and to determine whether the bell or gong on the car was sounded, or other proper warning given, just before the accident,⁸⁴ and if not, whether or not failure so to do was negligence under the circumstances,⁸⁵ as where the car was approaching a public crossing or street intersection.⁸⁶ Where, however, there is no evidence to indicate that a warning, if it had been given, would have been effective to avoid the accident, submission to the jury of the question of negligence in failing to warn is not necessary or proper.⁸⁷

Negative evidence as making question for jury.

Evidence that the witness heard no warning signal is ordinarily sufficient to justify submission to the jury of the question whether it was given,⁸⁸ provided the evidence shows that the witness had opportunity to hear a signal if given;⁸⁹ but evidence of failure to see lights does not make their presence

a question for the jury where under the circumstances they could not have been seen, at the time of looking for them, even if properly burning or displayed.⁹⁰

g. Approaching Crossing or Street Intersection

Whether a streetcar was being operated with proper care when at or approaching a street intersection or public crossing, or a railroad or street railroad crossing, is ordinarily a question for the jury.

In an action for injuries resulting from the operation of a streetcar, it is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether or not such car was, under the circumstances then existing, being operated with proper care and precaution when at or approaching a public crossing or street intersection,⁹¹

It is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether a person, vehicle, or animal on or near the track was in a position of such apparent peril when he or it was, or in the exercise of due care should have been, discovered by the operator of a streetcar as to call for affirmative measures to avoid the accident, and whether reasonable care was used to avoid the accident.

Thus, if there is legally sufficient evidence to go to the jury, and it is disputed, or, if undisputed, is such that different inferences might be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury as to whether or not under the circumstances the defendant company was guilty of negligence in running into or over a child,⁴ or bicycle rider,⁵ or person working on the tracks or in the street,⁶ in crushing a pedestrian between trolley cars traveling in opposite directions on parallel tracks;⁷ in running into an animal⁸ or vehicle⁹ on or near the tracks; or in running into and injuring a person or vehicle crossing the tracks.¹⁰ The submission of the question to the jury is not requisite or proper, however, where there is no evidence which would warrant a finding of negligence in failing to observe the injured person, vehicle, or animal, or discover or anticipate the peril, before the accident,¹¹ or no evidence tending to show negligence in operating the car or in failing to slow or stop it,¹² or where the evidence

as to care or negligence is undisputed and the inference to be drawn therefrom is clear and certain.¹³ What constitutes due care under the circumstances is a question of law.¹⁴

Animal frightened by car. In an action for injuries resulting from a horse or other animal becoming frightened at the operation of a streetcar, where the evidence is in conflict or is such that different inferences might reasonably be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury to determine whether or not the street railroad company operating the car was negligent in respect of the particular act or omission which caused the fright,¹⁵ and whether the operator of the car saw or should have seen the peril caused by the animal's fright,¹⁶ and thereafter exercised proper care to avert the threatened injury,¹⁷ as whether he should have stopped the car.¹⁸ The matter should not be submitted to the jury, however, where there is no evidence tending to show negligence in the operation of the car¹⁹ or failure to use due care after discovering the fright of the animal or the threatened danger therefrom,²⁰ or where but one conclusion as to negligence may reasonably be drawn from the evidence.²¹

I. Approaching or Passing Other Cars

It is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether the persons in charge of one car, in approaching or passing another, exercised due care or were guilty of negligence.

In an action for injuries resulting from the operation of a street railroad, it is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether the persons in charge of one car, in approaching or passing another, exercised due care or were guilty of negligence under the circumstances then existing.²² Thus, if there is legally sufficient evidence to go to the jury, and it is disputed, or, if undisputed, is such that different inferences might be drawn therefrom, it is a question for the jury as to whether or not, under the circumstances, the defendant company was guilty of negligence in running into, or over, a person emerging from behind a passing or standing car or vehicle.²³

J. Incompetency of Motorman

The questions of the incompetency of the operator of the streetcar, the company's knowledge thereof, and its want of due care in employing or retaining him should not be submitted to the jury in the absence of evidence.

The question of the incompetency of the motorman should not be submitted to the jury where there is no evidence, in an action for injuries resulting from the operation of a streetcar, sufficient to show any such incompetency²⁴ or any knowledge on the part of the street railroad company of his incompetency, or want of due care in employing or retaining him.²⁵

K. Acts in Emergencies; Mistakes of Judgment

It is ordinarily for the trier of facts to determine whether there was negligence in respect of an act done or omitted in an emergency, or a mistake of judgment.

In an action for injuries growing out of the operation or management of a street railroad, it is ordinarily for the jury or trier of facts to determine whether or not the street railroad company or its servant or employee was negligent in respect of an act done or omitted in an emergency,²⁶ or a mistake of judgment.²⁷

§ 325. — Contributory Negligence

- a. In general
- b. Collision with streetcar
- c. Looking and listening
- d. Avoidance of injury from defect or obstruction in street
- e. Children and persons under disability
- f. Acts in emergencies

a. In General

The question of negligence on the part of one injured as a result of the management or operation of a street railroad is primarily for the jury in an action for such injuries.

The question of negligence on the part of one injured as a result of the management or operation of a street railroad is primarily for the jury, in an action for such injuries, to be determined from the facts of the particular case;²⁸ and so, where the evidence is sufficient to justify a finding of such negligence or its absence, and the facts are in dispute, or if undisputed are such that more than one inference may reasonably be drawn therefrom, the question should be submitted to the jury,²⁹ and should not be disposed of by the court, by a dismissal³⁰ or nonsuit,³¹ or by directing a verdict.³²

was guilty of negligence contributing to his injuries is one of law for the court, and should not be submitted to the jury, however, where the evidence is insufficient to support a finding of contributory negligence,³³ or, in those jurisdictions in which plaintiff has the burden of proving due care, where the evidence is insufficient to show freedom from contributory negligence,³⁴ or where it is undisputed and such that reasonable minds can arrive at but one conclusion therefrom,³⁵ but should be disposed of by the court by dismissal or nonsuit,³⁶ or by the direction of a verdict,³⁷ except as other evidence may make the case proper to go to the jury on the question of last clear chance, as discussed infra § 326.

In an action for injuries to a person, or to his animal or vehicle, by being struck by a streetcar, it is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether such person exercised due care or was guilty of contributory negligence under the existing circumstances.

In an action for injuries to a person, or to his animal or vehicle, by being struck by a streetcar, it is ordinarily for the jury on conflicting evidence to determine whether such person exercised due care or was guilty of contributory negligence, under the circumstances existing at the time and place of the accident.³⁸

Statements not inconsistent as matter of law

Automobilist's statement in deposition that he did not see streetcar at any time before collision and his testimony at trial that he saw streetcar ten feet away when he was four or five feet from track, and addition-standing car which was suddenly moved,⁴² or in crossing behind a standing or passing car or vehicle, whereby he was struck by an approaching car,⁴³ or in crossing the track at a place where it or the street was defective,⁴⁴ or pausing on or near the track while crossing the street.⁴⁵

The general rule that contributory negligence is ordinarily a question for the jury applies also in the case of one traveling on or along the track,⁴⁶ or standing close to or on the track,⁴⁷ or permitting his horse or vehicle to stand near the track,⁴⁸ or failing to turn his vehicle out or away from the track in such manner as to avoid being struck by an approaching car,⁴⁹ or riding or driving a spirited or restive horse in a street in which the street railroad was operated,⁵⁰ or failing to get out of or away from a vehicle when danger threatened.⁵¹

Similarly, questions for the jury include whether al testimony that, when he went upon track, streetcar was two, three, four, or five feet away, were not inconsistent as matter of law.—Cunningham v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 77 S.W.2d 161, 229 Mo.App. 174.

or not an occupant of a vehicle driven by another exercised proper care and precaution for his own protection,⁵² and whether or not the negligence of such driver was imputable to him.⁵³

The question becomes one of law for the court, however, and should not be submitted to the jury, but should be disposed of by a nonsuit or directed verdict, where the burden is on plaintiff to show due care and the evidence thereof is insufficient⁵⁴ or purely conjectural,⁵⁵ or where the evidence of contributory negligence is clear and such that but one conclusion may reasonably be drawn therefrom,⁵⁶ unless there is other evidence calling for submission of the case to the jury on the question of last clear chance, as discussed infra § 326.

c. Looking and Listening

It is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether one injured by the operation of a street car exercised proper care under the existing circumstances as to looking or listening for the car, or was negligent in that respect.

Thus, it is for the jury to determine whether he saw or heard, or by the exercise of reasonable care could have seen or heard, the car in time to avoid being injured by it,⁵⁸ or whether he looked or listened with sufficient and proper care before going upon the tracks,⁵⁹ or whether, after looking once, he was negligent in failing to look again or to continue to look,⁶⁰ or whether it was negligence to approach or travel across or along the tracks without looking or listening,⁶¹ as in walking or driving along the tracks without looking to the rear for a car approaching from that direction.⁶²

Where, however, undisputed evidence clearly shows that the injured person's opportunity for seeing or hearing the approaching car was such that he could not have failed to see or hear it in time to avert an accident if he had used due care in looking or listening, his negligence in that respect should not be submitted to the jury, but is a question for the court,⁶³ and should be disposed of by the direction of a verdict for defendant⁶⁴ or by a nonsuit,⁶⁵ unless the evidence is such as to justify submission to the jury of the question of last clear chance, as discussed infra § 326.

d. Avoidance of Injury from Defect or Obstruction in Street

Contributory negligence of one injured by reason of a defect or obstruction in the street is ordinarily a question for the jury to determine.

It is ordinarily for the jury, in an action against a street railroad company for injuries suffered by reason of a defect or obstruction in the street, to determine whether or not the injured person exercised due care for his own safety to avoid injury from such defect or obstruction.⁶⁶

Obstructed view

(1) Where motorist entered intersection with traffic light in his favor and could not see streetcar approaching from the left because of automobiles in other lanes of traffic until it was too late to avoid collision, whether motorist was contributorily negligent in driving into intersection when his view was obstructed was for the jury.—Rea v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 25 A.2d 730, 344 Pa. 421.

(2) A motorist whose automobile was struck by a streetcar traveling at sixty miles an hour at a crossing where the view was obscured could not be held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law for failure to hear noise of oncoming car, even though some other person might by a keener sense of hearing have become aware of its approach, in the absence of the blowing of a whistle or the sounding of a gong.—Hisak v. e. Children and Persons under Disability

Where the evidence is sufficient to raise the issue, it is ordinarily for the jury to determine whether a child or a person laboring under a physical or mental disability was guilty of contributory negligence when injured by the operation of a streetcar.

It is for the jury, in an action against a street railroad company, to determine whether a child⁶⁷ or a person laboring under a physical or mental disability,⁶⁸ injured by the operation of a streetcar, was exercising due care for his own safety, or was guilty of contributory negligence, under the circumstances existing at the time and place of the accident, and in view of his age, intelligence, and ability, unless the evidence clearly shows that he acted in disregard of the degree of prudence reasonably to be expected of one of his years, experience, and capacity,⁶⁹ or unless there is no evidence of contributory negligence,⁷⁰ in which case the question should not be submitted to the jury.

It is ordinarily a question for the jury whether, in the particular case, such child or other person was capable of exercising judgment and discretion for his own protection,⁷¹ or was negligent in being on or near the track,⁷² or in crossing or attempting to cross the track or the street in which it was laid,⁷³ or with regard to looking or listening for an approaching car.⁷⁴ In the case of a child, it is also ordinarily for the jury to determine whether or not he was properly allowable on the street unattended,⁷⁵ and whether the parent or custodian of the child was guilty of contributory negligence in allowing him to wander onto or near the track.⁷⁶

f. Acts in Emergencies

In an action for injuries resulting from the operation of a street railroad, whether acts done by the injured person in an emergency constitute contributory negligence and whether the emergency was created through his own fault are ordinarily questions for the jury.

there is no sufficient evidence of any such opportunity to avoid the injury or of want of due care in attempting so to do.⁵⁰ To make a submissible case under the doctrine, there must be evidence that the injured person was visible to a person in the motorman's position exercising ordinary care soon enough to allow him, by the means at hand, and with safety to himself and passengers, to stop the car,⁵¹ or evidence disclosing that a reasonably sufficient time was afforded after the peril was discoverable during which interval it was reasonably possible for a warning to have been given, for the injured party to have heeded the warning, and to have escaped to safety.⁵² More is required than the showing of a mere possibility that the accident might have been avoided.⁵³

§ 327. — Willful, Wanton, or Reckless Injury

In an action against a street railroad company for injuries resulting from the operation of its cars or road, it is for the jury to determine whether the conduct of defendant or its servants at the time and place of the accident was such as to make it guilty of willfulness, wantonness or recklessness,⁵⁴ or gross negligence,⁵⁵ in causing the injury complained of, unless there is no evidence which would support a finding of willfulness or gross negligence, in which case the question should not be submitted to the jury, but should be disposed of by the court.⁵⁶

§ 328. — Proximate Cause; Unavoidable Accident

injured person is a question for the jury;⁹² but, where plaintiff asks damages for personal injuries and injury to his automobile, the question of property damage should not be submitted to the jury in the absence of sufficient proof of ownership.⁹³

Punitive damages. The question whether there is any evidence to justify the assessment by the jury of punitive damages in a particular case is for the court,⁹⁴ and the issue should not be submitted where there is no evidence of willfulness or gross negligence on the part of defendant;⁹⁵ but, where such evidence is present, the matter becomes one for the jury.⁹⁶

In actions to recover for injuries resulting from the operation of a street railroad, the instructions should correctly state the law applicable to the case, should not be misleading, and should conform to the pleadings and issues.

The rules governing instructions in civil actions, particularly actions for negligence, ordinarily apply in actions to recover for injuries resulting from the operation of a street railroad.⁹⁷ The instructions should correctly state the law applicable to the case,⁹⁸ should not be misleading⁹⁹ and should conform to the pleadings and issues.¹ Errors of form or phraseology in instructions are immaterial where they are not calculated to mislead the jury or prejudice the rights of the parties.²

Burden of proof. The rules with respect to instructions in other actions founded on negligence are applicable in an action for injuries resulting from the management or operation of a street railroad, as to the burden of proof and the degree of proof required.³

General rules as to instructions apply as to the instructions on the issue of negligence in an action to recover for injuries resulting from the operations of a street railroad.

The instructions, in an action against a street railroad company for injuries resulting from the management or operation of its road, relative to the duty and care or negligence of defendant with respect to the condition of its track or equipment are governed by the rules applicable to instructions in other actions founded on negligence and civil actions generally.⁴ These rules also govern the instructions as to the duty and care or negligence of the street railroad company or its servants in the management and operation of its cars,⁵ such as their

Instructions with respect to damages are governed by general rules.

The general rules relating to instructions in other actions founded on negligence and in civil actions generally are applicable, in actions for injuries resulting from the management or operation of a street railroad, as to the elements and measure of damages.²⁴

§ 336. Verdict and Findings

General rules as to verdicts and findings apply in actions for injuries resulting from the operations of street railroads.

The usual rules applicable in other actions founded on negligence, and in civil actions generally, govern, in actions for injuries resulting from the management or operation of a street railroad, as to general verdicts or findings by the jury,²⁵ general verdicts with special findings,²⁶ and verdicts on separate counts.²⁷ General rules also apply with respect to special findings,²⁸ their sufficiency,²⁹ their consistency with each other³⁰ and with a general verdict,³¹ their construction,³² and their operation and effect,³³ and such rules apply to the findings of the trial court.³⁴

§ 337. Appeal and Error

General rules as to appeal and error apply in actions to recover for injuries resulting from the management or operation of a street railroad.

The rules with respect to appeals and writs of error, and the determination thereon and decision thereof, applicable in other actions founded on negligence, and in civil actions generally, govern actions for injuries resulting from the management or operation of a street railroad.³⁵ Thus, if the verdict, finding, or judgment in the lower court is clearly against the weight of the evidence, or unsupported by any competent evidence, it will be reversed or set aside on appeal;³⁶ but, where there is sufficient evidence to support a verdict or finding, although it is conflicting, such verdict or finding or a judgment rendered thereon will not be disturbed on appeal,³⁷ nor will it be set aside or reversed for an

General rules as to damages, including exemplary or punitive damages, apply in actions to recover for injuries resulting from the operation of a street railroad.

The general rules as to damages in other civil actions are applicable in an action for injuries or damage sustained through the operation of a street railroad.⁴² Exemplary or punitive damages may be recovered where the injury was due to gross negligence or willful or wanton misconduct,⁴³ but not otherwise.⁴⁴

10. OFFENSES INCIDENT TO OPERATION OF STREET RAILROADS

§ 339. Offenses by Street Railroad Company or Its Servants

General rules of criminal law apply as to offenses in connection with the management and operation of street railroads.

The general rules governing prosecutions for other criminal offenses are applicable to offenses, as created in some jurisdictions by statutes or municipal ordinances, in connection with, or growing out of, the management or operation of a street railroad,⁴⁵ such as causing death through negligence,⁴⁶ or failure to operate cars at proper intervals,⁴⁷ or to stop them at proper places to take on or let off passengers,⁴⁸ or to run them through to the end of their routes,⁴⁹ or to ventilate them properly,⁵⁰ or to provide cars with protection to motormen from wind and storm,⁵¹ or to keep white and colored passengers separated,⁵² or to place signal lights at crossings over other street railroads,⁵³ or permitting the overcrowding of a car,⁵⁴ or the operation of a car not authorized by the company's franchise,⁵⁵ or the operation of a car without having both a motorman and a conductor thereon,⁵⁶ as well as offenses under general law,⁵⁷ including applicable provisions of a vehicle code or ordinance.⁵⁸

§ 340. Offenses against Street Railroad Property or Operation

General rules apply in the prosecution of offenses against or affecting street railroads. Statutes relating to offenses against railroads may or may not apply to street railroads.

The general rules applicable to other offenses and prosecutions therefor govern in prosecutions for offenses, as created in some jurisdictions by statute or municipal ordinance, against street railroad companies or affecting the operation of street railroads, such as boarding a moving car for the purpose of obtaining transportation thereon,⁵⁹ or hanging on the outside of a car,⁶⁰ or throwing missiles at a car,⁶¹ or wrecking or attempting to wreck a car,⁶² or injuring, removing, or destroying the road or any apparatus appertaining thereto,⁶³ or wrongfully obstructing the tracks.⁶⁴

Statutes relating to offenses against railroad property or operation are applicable to street railroads where they are not because of their nature inapplicable thereto and no intention that they shall not be so applied appears;⁶⁵ but otherwise they are inapplicable, and have been so held where the statutes antedated the existence of street railroads within the state, or where considered inapplicable by the legislature itself.⁶⁶

XI. CONSTRUCTION, ACQUISITION, AND OPERATION BY PUBLIC AUTHORITIES

§ 341. By Municipality

Where authorized, a municipality may construct, own, or operate a street railroad.

The state may, in the absence of constitutional restraint, delegate to a municipal corporation the power to construct, maintain, own or operate a street railroad, as discussed in Municipal Corporations § 1054 c, and, where so authorized, a municipality may construct, own, or operate a street railroad,⁶⁷ and incur indebtedness therefor.⁶⁸ A municipality in such case has been held to have the same rights, powers, and privileges, and to be subject to the same duties, regulations, and obligations, as a street railroad corporation,⁶⁹ except to the ex-

Special municipal corporation organized to operate transit system
Under the statutes creating the Chicago transit authority, what was contemplated was a transportation system providing local transportation for Chicago which would also operate between the city and the suburbs surrounding it.—Chicago Motor Coach Co. v. Budd, 105 N.E.2d 140, 346 Ill.App. 385.

Unification of transit system

In order to construe constitutional and statutory enactments relating to unification of the transit system of the city of New York, it is necessary to look at the evil which they were designed to remedy, purpose which motivated their enactment, and process which seemingly was intended to be provided to cure that evil and accomplish that purpose.—Bronx Chamber of Commerce v. Fullen, 21 N.Y.S.2d 474, 174 Misc. 524.

Submission to voters

(1) Where an ordinance providing for the construction of a municipal electric railway provided for the submission of the plan proposed to the voters at a special election to be held on the same day as a general city election and that a condensed statement of the plan should be printed on the official ballot, the printing of such condensed statement on a ballot separate from the general election ballot did not affect the validity of the submission, since the election, although held on the same day as the general election and by the same officers, was a special election and the laws relating to the form of the ballot at a general election were not mandatory.—State v.

King County Super. Ct., 138 P. 277, 77 Wash. 593.

(2) Alleged misinformation by city officials to the electors, preceding a vote on an ordinance for the construction of a municipal street railroad system, did not invalidate the election, because the voters were misled into believing its purpose was to acquire the existing property at a stated valuation less than its true value, where the submission was made in due form, the ordinance did not provide for the acquisition of the property at the alleged valuation, and no complaint was made of it before the election, especially in view of the provision of the city charter that no purchase could be made, except by contract approved by the electors.—Detroit United R. Co. v. Detroit, Mich., 41 S.Ct. 285, 255 U.S. 171, 65 L.Ed. 570.

(3) Provisions for the purchase of existing street railway lines, or, in case such purchase was not deemed wise, the construction of a parallel line, were not several and distinct purposes, so as to render a joint submission thereof to a vote of the people invalid.—Tulloch v. Seattle, 124 P. 451, 69 Wash. 178.

tent that they are not applicable to a municipality as owner and operator,⁷⁰ and subject to the rule that a municipal corporation has only such powers as are granted by the laws of the state.⁷¹ A duly adopted ordinance, under charter power, for the construction of a municipal street railroad, is not rendered invalid by an offer by the city to buy the property of an existing street railroad company, after the expiration of its franchise, at less than its fair valuation.⁷²

Over bridge. A municipality, through the board or commission having charge of such structures, may, under legislative authority, operate, or cause to be operated, a street railroad on a bridge constructed and owned by the municipality,⁷³ without obtaining a certificate of public convenience⁷⁴ or permission from the public service commission;⁷⁵ and this right carries with it by implication the right to erect a car barn underneath the bridge and by necessary trackage connect the bridge tracks with the barn.⁷⁶ However, municipal power to construct, repair, maintain, and operate bridges does not of itself authorize the officers of the city to operate a railroad on such a bridge.⁷⁷

§ 342. — Extent of System, and Application of Special Fund

Several street railroad lines may constitute a single municipal railway system within charter provisions.

Several radiating street railway lines built and operated by a city, although built at different times and in each instance submitted to public approval and their cost made possible through separate bond issues, constitute in actual operation a single municipally owned and operated street railway system,⁷⁸ subject in its entirety to all of the provisions of the city charter relating to the operation of a public utility by the city,⁷⁹ such as a provision for maintenance in the city treasury of a special fund to be set aside from the revenues of the railway for operating expenses, repairs, sinking fund, extensions, and reserve.⁸⁰ However, the term "extensions and improvements," as used in such a provision, does not include the purchase of an entirely independent railway system, theretofore privately owned and operated on other streets and thoroughfares and in sections of the municipality other than that occupied by the municipal railway system;⁸¹ nor does such provision authorize the expenditure of such moneys for the purpose of conducting an investigation by the board of public works as to the advisability and availability of the acquisition by purchase of a part or the whole of another street railway.⁸²

§ 343. — Contract for Construction, and Lease

Subject to applicable constitutional and statutory provisions a municipality may be authorized to lease a street railway system which it has constructed to a street railroad company.

Where properly authorized by constitution or statute, a municipality may dispose of a street railway system which it has constructed by leasing it to a

Power to purchase equipment as not including power to lease

The provision of the public service law applicable to the city of New York authorizing the board of transportation thereof to "purchase" all necessary materials and supplies for operation of transit system, read in connection with the whole law to which it refers, does not authorize the board of transportation of the city of New York to lease omnibus equipment for operation and maintenance of rapid transit facilities since a "purchase" of property involves a transfer of ownership and a passing of title, while a "lease" does not, and title remains in lessor and lessee only has use of property until expiration of the term.—Smull v. street railway company,⁸³ and may provide for its exclusive use by the lessee,⁸⁴ and the fact that the lessee has contributed to the cost of such system as a consideration for its use does not change the relationship between the city as lessor and lessee to that of partners.⁸⁵ Under some statutes the public authorities cannot proceed to construct a street railway unless an existing street railway company has agreed to lease and operate it.⁸⁶

Where the statute providing for the construction and leasing of a street railroad by a city vests in the board of rapid transit commissioners whatever control the city has over the possession of the railroad by a lessee thereof from the city, such control cannot be exercised by any other officer of the city;⁸⁷ and, where such control is vested in the public service commission, it has the power to determine whether, in contracting with a street railroad company for the construction and leasing of a rapid transit road, allowance should be made for depreciation in the existing plant in determining the net earnings of the company, for determining the rentals to be paid by it,⁸⁸ and to determine whether the street railroad company, with which the commission has contracted for the construction of the road, should be permitted to issue bonds for construction purposes.⁸⁹

A commission authorized to construct a subway or a tunnel must comply with the statute as to the mode of construction;⁹⁰ and, in determining which of certain structures shall be constructed, may act by a majority of its members, if all have had notice and opportunity to act;⁹¹ and the fact that the commission adopts some suggestions after the preparation of a contract with a street railroad company for the construction of an underground railroad, and after a public hearing thereon, does not require the contract to be submitted for a further public hearing, where the statute authorizes the commission to amend the draft contract in its discretion after a public hearing.⁹²

Where the statute authorizes the city to contract for the construction of an underground street railroad according to plans prepared by the rapid transit commission, provides that the city shall pay for the construction of the road and own the fee, and that the contractor employed to construct and operate the road shall equip it at his own expense, additional excavation and chambers in the walls of the tunnel, rendered necessary by order of the commission because of a determination on electricity as motive power, is a part of the construction and belongs to the city and should be paid for by it.⁹³ The making of such a contract, merely for the construction of a subway, which is to be and remain the property of the city, does not grant to the contractor a "franchise" in the street.⁹⁴

Franchise. A privilege or license, granted for a consideration to operate cars upon tracks belonging to the municipality, is a mere traffic agreement and not a franchise.⁹⁵ The right to operate an underground railroad pursuant to a lease from a city which owns the railroad is not a franchise.⁹⁶

Where authorized, a municipality may purchase a street railroad.

Where authorized, a municipality may purchase a street railroad, and, where it does so, it should be held to the performance of the terms of the purchase contract by every moral and equitable rule and by the same rules as control a private corporation under similar circumstances.⁹⁷ A street railroad franchise may provide for the purchase of the property by the municipality,⁹⁸ and such a provision is not destroyed by the fact that the power to purchase extends a reasonable period beyond the company's then chartered life.⁹⁹ General rules have been applied in determining the value of stock held by stockholders of a railroad company opposing a contract for the sale of the railroad to the municipality.¹

Where a city in purchasing an existing street railroad and issuing bonds therefor agrees to make periodic payments out of the gross revenues of the system into a special fund for payment of the bonds and interest, such method of payment is exclusive,² and, where the payments are promptly made, the city cannot be prevented from diverting gross revenues to the payment of subordinate claims, on the theory that the bonds create a lien in gross on all such revenues;³ nor, where the purchase is made by such method, can the amount of a judgment for the seller against the city be charged against the general funds of the city.⁴ So, also, a provision in the contract of purchase, which is also embodied in the deed and bill of sale, accepted by the city and by which it agrees, as part of the consideration, to pay a specified portion of the taxes assessed against the property for the current year, is a valid and enforceable obligation,⁵ and, as between itself and the seller, the city becomes primarily liable for such taxes, and the seller a mere surety, with the right, before payment of the taxes, to maintain a suit in equity to compel their payment by the city.⁶

Where the city charter requires that a contract for the sale or leasing of public property shall be taken by ordinance, a city purchasing a streetcar system is not bound by the seller's contract leasing advertising space in the cars, where it has not passed an ordinance accepting an assignment of the lease,⁷ notwithstanding it has accepted payments from the lessee.⁸ A charter provision requiring the municipality to consider offers to sell existing public utilities before constructing new ones is sufficiently complied with where a general solicitation of offers for the sale of any existing street railway is sent to the street railway company and others.⁹

Invalid contract. Where an ordinance authorizing the construction of a street railroad is void in its inception because of want of power in the municipality to grant the particular franchise, a contract given, in consideration of such grant, to transfer the railroad to the city on its request, and on payment of its cost and a certain amount in addition, is also void for want of consideration,¹⁰ and is not saved by a statutory provision authorizing the common council to authorize the construction of a street railroad where the consent of a majority in interest of the abutting owners has been obtained, and permitting the construction, extension, and use of any street railroad already partly constructed under permission of municipal

Where at time city acquired railway company there existed between the company and its employees a contract fixing wages for a prescribed period and providing for arbitration, and board of arbitration had settled controversy over wages by allowing an increase of twelve and one-half cents per hour effective only until date city acquired railway; but subsequently the city by ordinance authorized payment of increase of ten cents an hour, payment of the increased wages was a justifiable payment of a valid moral claim to avoid interruption of service. —Sweeny v. authorities, and to that end confirming the grants, licenses, and resolutions under which the construction was commenced,¹¹ and the company, therefore, is under no legal obligation to surrender or transfer its railroad to the city on request.¹²

Emergency deposit. In the absence of other claims, the grantor of a street railway, purchased by a city, is the beneficial owner of an emergency fund, deposited under its franchise, with the city,¹³ and, where the deed to the city specifically excepts money and choses in action, the city is not entitled to such fund, where, under the sale, the franchise is surrendered, since, the purpose of the fund as security for the performance of franchise duties having ceased, the fund is a chose in action to which the city has no defense,¹⁴ even though a general release has been embodied in the contract of sale which is limited to a date prior to the conveyance of the railway to the city;¹⁵ and, if the city refuses to return such fund, it is liable for interest thereon from the date of the surrender of the franchise.¹⁶

§ 345. By State

A statute providing for the taking over and management of a street railroad system by trustees for the commonwealth and for the assessment of a tax to make up a deficiency in revenues has been held valid.

A statute providing for the taking over and operation of a street railroad system by trustees for the commonwealth and for the assessment of a tax to make up a deficiency in revenues has been held valid.¹⁷

Where such a statutory provision is accepted by the street railway company, it constitutes an agreement between it and the commonwealth that the latter shall take over the management and operation of the road and pay therefor the amounts specified as compensation for its use.¹⁸ Title to the property remains in the company with the state taking possession only to the extent and subject to the conditions prescribed by the statute,¹⁹ and the revenue arising from the operation of the railroad is not public money, but belongs to the company.²⁰

Under such a statute, the railroad is managed by the state and not by a subdivision thereof although the railroad operates only in part of the state, and taxes for any deficiency are assessed only in that

Only power to contract involved

The legislature did not purport by the Public Control Act to take or to authorize taking of possession of properties of Boston Elevated Railway Company or subsequent management thereof by virtue of any sovereign power other than power to enter into contract with company for carrying out of a public purpose.—Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 67 N.E.2d 676, 319 Mass. 642.

The commonwealth could sue for a breach of the contract and it might maintain an action brought in its own name by the attorney general to recover money due it.—Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., supra.

Construction as a private contract

Such contract is to be construed as would be a contract between individuals.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Metropolitan Transit Authority, 83 N.E.2d 445, 323 Mass. 562.

19. Mass.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 39 N.E.2d 87, 310 Mass. 528.

Reversion of property

The provision of the Public Control Act stating that at expiration of period of public management and operation of the Boston Elevated Railway Company, control of property should revert to company and that it should then be in good operating condition, imports that control of railway system as a unit should revert to company but does not import that all property of which trustees originally took possession, in the form in which it then existed, should so revert, provision having been made for depreciation, obsolescence, and rehabilitation.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, supra.

Railroad company retains its corporate existence and continues to be the owner of the properties or rights therein constituting the railway system, notwithstanding the Public Control Act.—Auditor of Commonwealth v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 43 N.E.2d 124, 312 Mass. 74.

The arrangement amounts to a lease of the railroad property to the state.—City of Boston v. Treasurer and Receiver General, 130 N.E. 390, 237 Mass. 403, affirmed 43 S.Ct. 129, 260 U.S. 309, 67 L.Ed. 274.

20. Mass.—Auditor of Commonwealth v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 43 N.E.2d 124, 312 Mass. 74.

Profits from operation

The company continues to derive profits from its railway system by reason of provision in Public Control Act for dividends to its stockholders which, although fixed in amount, are in effect guaranteed by the commonwealth by provision that if company's income is insufficient to meet cost of service, including dividends, and the reserve fund is insufficient, the deficiency shall be paid to the company by the commonwealth out of money raised by taxation.—Auditor of Commonwealth v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., supra.

area.²¹ The provision of a statute, requiring the state to pay any deficiency of the income over the cost of service, creates an obligation or liability on the part of the state which must be dealt with as such by all the officers of the state.²² The determination of the cost of service for the purpose of ascertaining the deficiency for which the state is liable is to be made in the first instance by the trustees and their determination cannot be set aside unless it is unreasonable;²³ while their determination is not conclusive on the state,²⁴ the state cannot question the wisdom or expedience of expenditures made.²⁵

The statutory requirement that the trustees maintain the property and make provision for depreciation, obsolescence, and rehabilitation, although expressed as an element of compensation for the use of the company's property, implies a purpose that the property shall be maintained for the benefit of the public served by the railway system.²⁶ The trustees who operate and manage the railroad are public officers²⁷ even though they act through the medium of the railroad company and their acts bind the company.²⁸ The trustees have such power as is expressly granted and such implied powers as

22. Mass.—In re Opinion of the Justices, 35 N.E.2d 5, 309 Mass. 609.

Compensation, not gratuity

The payment of fixed dividends to stockholders as provided in contract between commonwealth and the company is not a "gratuity" to stockholders, but in the nature of "compensation" for use of the property in carrying out the public purpose of the Public Control Act.—Auditor of Commonwealth v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 43 N.E.2d 124, 312 Mass. 74.

23. Mass.—Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 67 N.E.2d 676, 319 Mass. 642.

Discretion

The trustees possess broad discretionary powers in determining the allowances for depreciation and obsolescence that should be included in cost of service and amount that should be expended for rehabilitation of property.—Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., supra.

Depreciation may be included in cost of service and court had no power to decide what was best method of accounting with respect to depreciation; the purpose of a charge for depreciation is to protect integrity of investment, and cost of service rendered should not be burdened with any item which yields the company more than is required to offset loss due to depreciation, and the contractual rights of commonwealth created by Public Control Act must be respected in determining allowances for depreciation and obsolescence that should be included in cost of service.—Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., supra.

Rehabilitation

Where the commonwealth contracted to rehabilitate the property and to maintain and return it to the company in good operating condition, the trustees were authorized to charge to cost of service amount necessary for that purpose, regardless of whether charges were made ostensibly for depreciation or under some other heading.—Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., supra.

Capital loss which occurred before public management and operation began cannot be charged to cost of service while publicly operated.—Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., supra.

Appraisal

Where commonwealth agreed to rehabilitate property and to maintain and return it to company in good operating condition and to make up any deficiency if revenue and reserve fund proved to be inadequate for that purpose, the fact that trustees did not have an appraisal made of the company's property when they took possession was not just ground of complaint.—Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., supra.

26. Mass.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 39 N.E.2d 87, 310 Mass. 528.

Public purpose

Under the Public Control Act, the Boston Elevated Railway Company's railway system continues to be used for the "public purpose" of transporting passengers as a common carrier.—Auditor of Commonwealth v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 43 N.E.2d 124, 312 Mass. 74.

27. Mass.—Auditor of Commonwealth v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., supra.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 39 N.E.2d 87, 310 Mass. 528.

Audit

The quoted words of statutory provision that the state auditor shall annually make a careful audit of the "accounts of all departments, offices, commissions, institutions, and activities of the Commonwealth" are comprehensive terms, but their meaning in particular instances cannot be determined solely by dictionary definitions, and whether they include the accounts of the board of trustees of the Boston Elevated Railway Company appointed pursuant to the Public Control Act must be determined in the light of the nature and functions of the board and its relation to the company and the relevant statutes.—Auditor of Commonwealth v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 43 N.E.2d 124, 312 Mass. 74.

Determination of cost of service

Although trustees of Boston Elevated Railway Company may for some purposes be considered to be public officers, in determining allowances for depreciation and obsolescence to be included in cost of service under Public Control Act, they were acting as agents of the company concerning a matter covered by contract between company and commonwealth, and interpretation of their contractual authority to make charges against cost of services was an appropriate subject for declaratory decree.—Attorney General v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 67 N.E.2d 676, 319 Mass. 642.

28. Mass.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Metropolitan Transit Authority, 83 N.E.2d 445, 323 Mass. 562.—Auditor of Commonwealth v. Trustees of Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 43 N.E.2d 124, 312 Mass. 74.—Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 39 N.E.2d 87, 310 Mass. 528.

are reasonably necessary for the performance of their duties.²⁹ The statute contemplates that the facilities of the railroad system shall be adapted to meet the changing transportation needs of the public,³⁰ and the trustees in the exercise of their judgment may discontinue certain services.³¹

Where the statute, on acceptance by the company, in substance provides for a contract of sale, it is to be construed as a whole.³² A provision for the assumption by the state of all the company's outstanding debts and liabilities does not include the company's liability for federal income tax on the gain realized from the sale,³³ but does include legal and other incidental expenses incurred by the company in closing the sale.³⁴ Where the statutory contract gives the state an option to purchase, notice of the exercise of the option as of a stated future date is not a sale as of the date of the notice.³⁵ The extension of a lease of an elevated railway to the commonwealth or of a system of public management thereof does not violate a constitutional provision requiring every charter, franchise, or act of incorporation to remain subject to revocation and amendment, in that such lease would constitute, in substance and effect, a contract as to public business between the commonwealth and a public service corporation.³⁶

Actions for the enforcement of obligations arising during public operation are to be brought by and against the company and not the state.³⁷

STRENGTH. The quality or property of being physically strong; power; force.¹

STREPTOCOCCUS. A genus of the tribe Streptococceæ, family Lactobacteriaceæ, consisting of spherical organisms occurring in pairs or large wavy chains, seldom singly, division of the individuals taking place in one plane only.² "Strep-tococcie" is defined as "streptococcal," which in turn is defined as meaning relating to, or caused by, some species of streptococcus.³ "Streptococcie" is said to be the scientific term for a form of infection known as blood poisoning.⁴

STREPTOTHRICOSIS. An infectious disease caused by one or more species of Streptothrix; it is marked by a chronic suppurative inflammation, the pus containing granules composed chiefly of colonies of the causal microorganism.⁵

Books kept by trustees are books of the company and not of the commonwealth, and, while the books should reflect truthfully transactions of company, the company was not required during the period of public control to keep its books in conformity with those regulations of any governmental agency that are directed to privately owned and operated railway systems.—Attorney General v. Dissolution of company

Under the Public Control Act, pursuant to which the Boston Elevated Railway was operated by public trustees, providing that acceptance constituted agreement by railway to sell assets to the commonwealth, and that sale under the option should work a "dissolution of the company," dissolution was not instantaneous but expressly subject to general statutory provisions relative to dissolu-

STRESS. Pressure; strain.⁶

STRETCH. To extend or draw out, as to full length or width; hence, to draw tight; tighten.⁷

It has been said that the natural meaning of the word "stretched" as applied to an elastic band is that of intentional extension under tension.⁸

The term "stretching" as employed in the description of boundaries is considered in Boundaries § 4.

STRETCHERS. A technical term of the brick-layer trade which has been applied to three courses of brick laid parallel to the wall.⁹

STRIA. Curved, crooked, and intermittent gouges of irregular depth and width and rough definition,¹⁰ a channel, furrow, or hollow.¹¹

The term has been distinguished from "flat" see 36 C.J.S. p 1023 note 20.

STRICT. Accurate;¹² precise;¹³ exact;¹⁴ rigorous; severe;¹⁵ strenuously enjoined and maintained;¹⁶ not wide or loose;¹⁷ undeviating.¹⁸ Also intimately close, as friendship.¹⁹

STRICTI JURIS. Literally "Of strict right or law; according to strict law."²⁰

The doctrine of stricti juris is treated in Guaranty § 38 d, Liens § 5 b, and Maritime Liens § 7.

STRICTLY. Closely; in a strict manner; positively; precisely; rigorously; stringently.²¹ It is synonymous with "essentially" see 30 C.J.S. p 1228 note 68.

STRIPE. A contention for superiority; a contest.²²

Criminal conspiracy under English common law

"It is true that there was a time when the courts of England held that an agreement of workmen to quit work in a body, for the purpose of securing better wages or improved conditions for labor, was a criminal conspiracy at common law; but this attitude may well be considered to have been a survival of the spirit which existed when Gurth, the Saxon swineherd, wore an iron collar riveted about his neck, and more than 40 years ago the English Parliament repudiated this doctrine by an affirmative statute."—Hall v. "Striking," the present participle of "strike,"³⁰ implies force applied with impetus; a blow.³¹ "Struck" is the past tense of "strike."³²

Phrases employing the various forms of the word are set out in the note.³³

In the Industrial or Labor Sense

In General. The early conception of the strike was as a conspiracy to be dealt with as such, in either a criminal or a civil action,³⁴ and the opinion has sometimes been expressed that there is no such thing as a legal or peaceful strike.³⁵

telligence. From first to last, from the earliest recorded strike to that in the state of West Virginia, which proceeded simultaneously with the argument of this motion, to that at Connellsville, Pa., occurring as I write, force and turbulence, violence and outrage, arson and murder, have been associated with the strike as its natural and inevitable concomitants. No strike can be effective without compulsion and force. That compulsion can come only through intimidation. A strike without violence would equal the representation of the tragedy of Hamlet with the part of Hamlet omitted. The moment that violence becomes an essential part of a scheme, or a necessary means of effecting the purpose of a combination, that moment the combination, otherwise lawful, becomes illegal. All combinations to interfere with perfect freedom in the proper management and control of one's lawful business, to dictate the terms upon which such business shall be conducted, by means of threats or by interference with property or traffic or with the lawful employment of others, are within the condemnation of the law. It has well been said that the wit of man could not devise a legal strike, because compulsion is the leading idea of it. A strike is essentially a conspiracy to extort by violence; the means employed to effect the end being not only the cessation of labor by the conspirators, but the necessary prevention of labor by those who are willing to assume their places, and, as a last resort, and in many instances an essential element of success, the disabling and destruction of the property of the master; and so, by intimidation and by the compulsion of force, to accomplish the end designed. I know of no peaceable strike. I think that no strike was ever heard of that was or could be successful unaccompanied by intimidation and violence."—Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co.,

This early concept has given place to the acceptance of the strike as an indispensable,³⁶ fundamental,³⁷ common-law,³⁸ right of labor in its struggle with capital,³⁹ and the right to strike is now generally recognized,⁴⁰ and it has been said that the change in the law by which strikes, once illegal and even criminal, are now recognized as lawful was effected in America largely without the intervention of legislation.⁴¹

"Undisputed also is the proposition, based upon sound public policy, that workmen have a common law right to strike, that is, to combine to cease work, for the purpose of coercing their employer into providing higher wages, shorter hours and better conditions of employment. As early as 1542, in the leading case of Commonwealth v. Hunt, 4 Metc. 111, 38 Am.Dec. 346, this court held that an indictment for conspiracy, alleging in substance 'that the defendants and others formed themselves into a society, and agreed not to work for any person, who should employ any journeyman or other person, not a member of such society, after notice given him to discharge such workman' (page 128), did not charge either an illegal object or illegal means. In that case, it is believed for the first time, the general right of workmen, when free from valid contractual obligation, to strike against their employer, was established. It has never been challenged since."—Simon v. Schwachman, 18 N.E.2d 1, 3, 301 Mass. 573.

Recognition of right in England

In England since the legislation of 1871–1875, the legality of trade disputes, or strikes as such, has been fully recognized. That is, the cessation or abstention from work by laborers in order to influence and better employment conditions has been recognized, but the mode and manner of carrying out the strike are subject to certain prescribed conditions.—Park v. Locals Nos. 106, 107, 108, & 167 of Hotel & Restaurant Employees Int. Alliance, 22 Ohio N.P., N.S. 257, 276.

uine emotion, sometimes in rant, and sometimes in misguided ignorance, labor speaks of its 'right' to strike as God-given. Right to strike is God-given in the same sense that right indicated by the word 'property' is God-given. They both developed naturally out of the relation of man to his environment, including other men. The primitive man claimed the game he killed, because it was necessary to his survival. This ownership extended to the flints he chipped, the arrows he barbed, and other things on which he depended for existence. Consciousness that a fight and probable injury would result induced other men to refrain from interfering with his possession. The practice grew into an overtly admitted claim. The practice became habitual, then customary and general, and finally crystallized into a rule, simply through a feeling that the rule possessed obligatory force. When legal institutions were set up, the sphere of self-help in enforcing the rule was very greatly narrowed. The right to strike grew up in precisely the same way. Quitting work, first permanently, and then with the expectation of resuming was found by experience to produce a result which served an end. The practice of quitting work grew as the satisfaction was more often desired. The practice so fitted into the scheme of relations that it became recognized as rightful, and was protected by law. It has served as a rude but valuable weapon in the attainment of justice, and has been a positive factor contributing to social progress. As in the case of property, abuse and misuse are not to be tolerated."—State ex rel. Hopkins v. Howat, 198 P. 686, 699, 109 Kan. 376.

"This reversal of a common-law rule was not due to the rejection by the courts of one principle and the adoption in its stead of another, but

The right to strike is now regarded as one manifestation of the competition or struggle for survival or place which is inevitable in individualistic society,⁴² and the strike is considered to be an economic⁴³ weapon⁴⁴ with which the employee may legally arm himself to defend or assert his rights, or maintain his status, in industrial disputes,⁴⁵ and is a lawful instrument in a lawful economic struggle or competition between employer and employees as to the share or division between them of the joint product of labor and capital,⁴⁶ and the rules governing strikes have grown from the economic relations and the disparity of bargaining power between employer and employee.⁴⁷ However, the courts have expressed regret that society has not been able to evolve a more efficient or logical mode of settling labor disputes than the strike,⁴⁸ which has been characterized as an archaic clumsy expedient, and a disruptive force.⁴⁹

The right to strike is a relative right⁵⁰ which must be exercised with due regard for the rights of others,⁵¹ and neither the common law nor the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution confers the absolute right to strike.⁵²

Since the act of workmen quitting employment in a body cannot, in itself, involve any question of public peace, health, or safety, unless it be complicated with some other problem, as stated infra p 529 note 93, strikes may not be prohibited by municipal regulation,⁵³ and such regulations have been held to be void as unreasonable and contrary to public policy.⁵⁴

No higher than other rights

"The right of a labor association to strike is no higher than the right of a nonunion workman to take employment in place of the strikers."—Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, Local No. 8,760, 103 P. 324, 328, 156 Cal. 70.

Limited right

"We have now arrived at the point where a labor union, being an organization brought about by the exercise on the part of its members of the right of every citizen to pursue his calling as he thinks best is limited in what it can do by the existence of the same right in each and every other citizen to pursue his and their calling as he or they think best. In addition to the limitation thus put on labor unions there is a fact which puts a further limitation on what acts a labor union can legally do. That is the increase of power which a combination of citizens has over the individual citizen. Take for example the power of a labor union to compel by a strike compliance with its demands. Speaking generally a strike to be successful means not only coercion and compulsion but coercion and compulsion which, for practical purposes, are irresistible. A successful strike by laborers means, in many if not most cases, that for practical purposes the strikers have such a control of the labor which the employer must have that he has to yield to their demands. A single individual may well be left to take his chances in a struggle with another individual. But in a struggle with a number of persons combined together to fight an individual, the individual's chance is small, if it exists at all. It is plain that a strike by a combination of persons has a power of coercion which an individual does not have."—Pickett v. of a body of workmen⁷⁵ for the purpose of obtaining or resisting a change in the conditions of employment;⁷⁶ a concerted cessation of work, intended to disrupt the business of the employer, and thereby induce him to act in a manner desired by the strikers;⁷⁷ a simultaneous cessation of work by workmen acting in combination to compel their common employer to accede to demands made on him by such combination.⁷⁸

Since it is uniformly recognized that a legal strike may be for the purpose of improving the conditions of the employees, or to maintain or secure higher wages as stated infra p 530 note 16—p 531 note 18, a strike exists where men quit their work because their employer refuses the conditions demanded of him,⁷⁹ and where there is a disagreement between employer and employee as to wages, and a demand is made by the employees for new and different terms, and there is a refusal by the employer to comply, and as a consequence there is a refusal of the employees to work, there is a strike in the ordinary meaning of the word.⁸⁰ Furthermore, the courts have said that they are not prepared, in the absence of evidence, to hold as a matter of law that a combination among employees, having for its object their orderly withdrawal in a large number or in a body from the service of their employer simply because of a reduction of wages is not a "strike," within the meaning of the word as commonly used.⁸¹

—As a Verb. The word "strike," when used as a verb and with reference to the employer-employee relationship, in common usage means to quit work along with others in order to compel an employer to accede to some demand,⁸² as for increase of pay, or to protest against something, as a reduction of wages;⁸³ as to strike for higher pay or shorter hours of work;⁸⁴ to quit work in order to obtain, or resist, a change in conditions of employment;⁸⁵ to quit work in order to compel an increase or prevent a reduction of wages;⁸⁶ to quit work in a body, or by combination, in order to compel their employers to raise their wages;⁸⁷ to cease from work in order to extort higher wages as workmen;⁸⁸ to cease work in a body by prearrangement until a grievance is redressed;⁸⁹ to press a claim or demand by coercive or threatening action of some kind.⁹⁰

Legality of Strike. It has been stated that a strike can never be, in and of itself, illegal,⁹¹ and is not, in and of itself, an unlawful act,⁹² since the act of workmen quitting employment in a body cannot, alone, involve any question of public peace, health, or safety, unless it be complicated with some other problem.⁹³ It does not follow, however, that all strikes are lawful or legal,⁹⁴ but neither is it true that all strikes are necessarily illegal⁹⁵ or unlawful.⁹⁶ A strike may be legal⁹⁷ or lawful,⁹⁸ or it may be illegal⁹⁹ or unlawful,¹ or it may even be criminal.²

While a strike may not be in violation of an express contract or statute,³ it is generally recognized that the legality or illegality of a strike depends on two factors, first, the purpose for which it is maintained, and second, the means employed in carrying it on,⁴ and these two factors are treated in the two following subdivisions.

—As Dependent on Purpose. One of the factors which determines the legality or illegality of a strike is the purpose for which the strike is maintained, as stated supra p 529 note 4, and thus a strike may be illegal because of its purpose,⁵ however orderly the manner in which it is conducted,⁶ and if a strike is for an unlawful object all acts done in support of the strike are unlawful.⁷

A lawful strike may be maintained only for the purpose of obtaining that which is lawful,⁸ since a strike for an unlawful purpose is beyond any lawful sanction⁹ and may not be maintained,¹⁰ and a combination to strike for the purpose of accomplishing an object which is not regarded as lawful is a wrong for which the law affords a remedy.¹¹

A strike for both a legal and an illegal purpose is an illegal strike,¹² but the mere violation of a contract not to strike does not render the strike illegal.¹³

Strikes to accomplish certain ends are lawful,¹⁴ such as strikes to assert a supposed right or to obtain an economic advantage,¹⁵ and it is uniformly recognized that strikes to improve the conditions of the employees are legal,¹⁶ as are strikes to main-

excluded all cases where the employees are under contract to work for their employer, because it is now settled in this commonwealth at least that competition and similar defenses are not a justification for inducing an employee or other person to commit a breach of contract and thereby interfering with the business of the employer. . . . ployee felt to have been wrongfully discharged,²⁵ and strikes for other purposes have been held to be legal.²⁶

It is equally well recognized that a strike is illegal if its purpose is to gratify malice,²⁷ or to harm or inflict injury on others,²⁸ or to injure a person in his business²⁹ where the strike results in no pecuniary benefit to the strikers,³⁰ and thus a strike, if not in self-interest, but for the sole purpose of injuring the employer, may be a malicious tort.³¹ Strikes for other purposes have been held to be illegal,³² such as strikes to enforce the payment of a claim,³³ and strikes to destroy interstate commerce and create public opinion hostile to a governmental board;³⁴ and a strike is illegal if it is the result of an agreement depriving those engaged in it of their liberty of action.³⁵

A strike to compel the employment of a larger number of workers than the employer desires has been held to be illegal,³⁶ and it has been said that it is not a lawful labor objective for a union to insist that machinery be discarded in order that manual labor may take its place, and thus secure additional opportunity of employment,³⁷ but it has also been said that, individually and collectively, the members of any union may at any time refuse to work because machinery is employed, or for any other reason, and may strike in so doing.³⁸

A strike is both unlawful and criminal if its purpose is to destroy the property of another, or to deprive another of his liberty or property without just cause,³⁹ and a strike is criminal if it be part of a combination for the purpose of injuring or molesting either masters or men.⁴⁰

It has been said that the courts are hopelessly divided as to whether a strike to unionize a shop or, in pursuance thereof, to compel the discharge of a nonunion employee is legal or illegal,⁴¹ and that there is a decided conflict between courts in different jurisdictions as well as between courts in the same jurisdiction.⁴² There are statements to the effect that strikes for the purpose of unionization⁴³ or to force the discharge of nonunion men⁴⁴ are illegal; and that a strike for a closed shop is a strike for an unlawful purpose,⁴⁵ and lacks a legitimate aim.⁴⁶ On the other hand, there are statements to the effect that a strike for a union or closed shop,⁴⁷ or to unionize an entire trade, business, or industry,⁴⁸ or to increase the number of members of a union,⁴⁹ or to force the discharge of nonunion men⁵⁰ is legal, and it has been said that the weight of authority in this country is that a primary strike for a closed shop is not per se unlawful.⁵¹

A position somewhat between the two extremes is that a strike for a closed shop is prima facie unlawful, but it may be justified by showing that it was inaugurated to advance the material interests of the union.⁵² The apparent conflict as to the legality or illegality of the strike to secure a closed or union shop results to some extent from the fact that certain contracts for the closed or union shop are illegal, either because of being contrary to public policy, or because of being monopolistic, or because of being contrary to statute, while such contracts as do not violate public policy, or are not monopolistic, or are not contrary to statute, are legal. Such contracts are treated, from the standpoint of public policy, in Contracts § 267, from the monopoly standpoint in Monopolies § 80, and, from the statutory standpoint, in Master and Servant § 28 (40).

Whether the purpose for which a strike is instituted is or is not a legal justification for the strike is a question of law to be decided by the court.⁵³ In order to be a legal strike it is necessary that the strikers should have acted in good faith in striking for a purpose which the courts hold to have been a legal purpose for a strike,⁵⁴ but it is not necessary that they should have been in the right in instituting a strike for such a purpose.⁵⁵ On the other hand, a strike is not a strike for a legal purpose because the strikers struck in good faith for a purpose which they thought was a sufficient justification for the strike.⁵⁶

It has been said that a strike does not need to be justified,⁵⁷ and whenever a strike is declared the employees are not required to justify it on the ground that the object of the strike falls within any particular category of the permissible causes.⁵⁸ Rather, it devolves on those who attack the validity of a strike to prove that it comes within an express exception to the general right of workers to strike.⁵⁹

—As Dependent on Means and Methods Employed. One of the factors which determines the legality or illegality of a strike is the means employed in carrying it on, as stated supra p 529 note 4, and if a strike is for a lawful purpose, as discussed in the previous subdivision, it will be lawful if conducted without violence or intimidation.⁶⁰ The right to strike includes the right to use all lawful and peaceable means in support of the strike⁶¹ and for the attainment of the lawful objects thereof,⁶² and to induce, by such means, present and expectant employees to join the ranks of the strikers,⁶³ and the means employed are lawful if peaceable and devoid of the elements of intimidation and obstruction,⁶⁴ and thus a peaceable and orderly strike is not in violation of law.⁶⁵

On the other hand, labor may not, in conducting a strike, resort to violence and other unlawful conduct,⁶⁶ since the right to strike does not mean the right to strike with clubs, stones, or other weapons,⁶⁷ and the use of illegal means in aid of a lawful strike is a wrong for which the law affords a remedy.⁶⁸ Thus a strike remains lawful only as long as the means employed are lawful,⁶⁹ and a strike is unlawful when unlawful means are used to uphold or maintain it.⁷⁰ In general, the means employed must be free from falsehood, libel, or defamation, and from physical violence, coercion, or moral intimidation,⁷¹ and if such means are employed to carry on a strike, the strike is illegal,⁷² at least until those illegal acts are discontinued.⁷³ However, if the purpose of a strike is lawful, but unlawful means are used to effectuate it, such means cannot be made to reach back and taint the purpose itself with unlawfulness, and thus render unlawful all acts done in its furtherance.⁷⁴

At one time picketing was deemed to be an illegal means of conducting a strike,⁷⁵ and strikes have been held to be illegal when accompanied by unlawful picketing,⁷⁶ but picketing, when properly conducted, is no longer regarded as unlawful per se, and is considered to be a legitimate method strikers have a right to employ to notify the public of the —Incidental Results as Affecting Legality. While it is well recognized that a strike is illegal if its purpose is to gratify malice, or harm or inflict injury on others, or injure a person in his business, as stated supra p 532 notes 27-29, a strike is not rendered unlawful because it incidentally results in injury to others,⁷⁹ or hampers the employer⁸⁰ and seriously interferes with the free and unrestrained control and operation of his business,⁸¹ or

"The usefulness and value of labor organizations is fully recognized. Their efforts to better the condition of labor have been remarkably effective, beneficial to labor, and of great value to society and the state. They may use any lawful means to accomplish these ends. Capital and labor unite in production, and between them must be divided the fruits of their joint efforts. Each is desirous of increasing its own share, and this is necessarily at the expense of the other. From this results an economic warfare. The forces are marshaled against each other—capital in corporations managed by directors and labor in Unions managed by councils. This struggle often creates waste and imposes hardships on the rest of the people; but such things society endures as the price of individualism. Fortunately the warfare is subject to municipal law, and society is strong enough to impose its terms on the combatants. Certain methods and weapons the law permits. Others it prohibits. It permits the strike on the one side and the lockout on the other. But each combatant must respect the rights of the other guaranteed by our Constitution. Among these are life, liberty, and property. Violence against persons and tangible property will not be permitted. Neither will attacks on intangible property rights, like business, good will, or trade, be permitted. One cardinal principle must be borne in mind, that any element of illegality essential to a scheme or combination makes the whole illegal. This principle the defendants have overlooked. They have found a lawful means, viz., strikes, and an ultimate lawful end, viz., the improvement of labor; but they have forgotten that the very turning point in their scheme, and which alone makes it effective, is the coercion of plaintiff by injuring property rights. This is exactly what the defendants intended, it is what they have done, and it is unlawful."—Albro J. Newton Co. v. Erickson, 126 N.Y.S. 949, 953, 954, 70 Misc. 291.

results in some injury to the employer's business,⁸² and a strike is not unlawful even though its effect is to cause financial loss to the employer,⁸³ and it has been said that the right of employees to strike does not infringe any right of the employer.⁸⁴

The right to strike carries with it by implication the right to interfere with the employer's business to a certain extent,⁸⁵ since the right to persuade prospective employees by legitimate argument must of necessity interfere with the employer's business, and, where labor is essential to the successful operation of a business, any interference with that labor is an interference with the employer's business.⁸⁶ Whether the interference with the employer's business is lawful or unlawful depends on the facts in each case,⁸⁷ and if the concerted action which is one of the characteristics of a strike is justified there is no liability for the resulting intentional harm,⁸⁸ and it has been said that this is a change of philosophy, and for this change courts, not legislatures, are the more responsible.⁸⁹

Characteristics, Elements, or Ingredients of Strike. There are a number of outstanding characteristics of a strike, as that term is employed in modern times,⁹⁰ and these characteristics are considered in the following subdivisions.

—Employer-Employee Relationship.

Existence of relationship. One of the outstanding characteristics,⁹¹ or essential ingredients⁹² of a strike as that term is employed in modern times⁹³ is that there exist an established employer-employee relationship between the strikers and the person or persons against whom the strike is directed,⁹⁴ and that in the absence of such a relationship there can be no strike,⁹⁵ and it is not a strike for workmen

"It will be noticed in all these definitions, and in every definition of a strike that can be obtained, that a strike only results where there is the relation of employer and employé; that is, a strike can only be said to exist where there is a trade dispute between the employer and his workmen. This relation is the essential basis of the legal right to maintain and enforce a strike. A strike can not be said to exist where the relation of employer and employé did not exist."—Park v. to refuse to enter into the employment of a particular employer.⁹⁶

While it has been said that all the recognized definitions of an industrial strike confine it to the concerted action by the employees of the particular employer against whom it is aimed, that is, between the individuals who are under present contract of employment with a particular employer and such employer, and to no one outside of such class,⁹⁷ there is, however, some difference of opinion as to whether the right to strike against an employer is a right which is restricted to the employees of such employer.⁹⁸ In some jurisdictions, under the common law,⁹⁹ the right to strike is deemed to be the right of the employees only,¹ and labor unions and other persons assisting striking employees do so only in the right, and for the benefit, of those employees,² and it is only where a trade union itself has contractual relations with an employer, as by an agreement for a closed shop, that the union may take coercive action in its own right.³ In other jurisdictions a strike may be maintained against an employer by persons who, although not employed by such employer, are employed in the same trade or business.⁴

Continuance of relationship. It is an ingredient of a strike that there exist an intention on the part of the employees to return to work when their aims are accomplished,⁵ and it is also an ingredient of a strike that there exist an intention on the part of the employer to reemploy the same men or men of a similar class when the demands are acceded to, or withdrawn, or otherwise adjusted.⁶ The employees who remain to take part in the strike do so that they may be ready to go to work again on terms to which they shall agree, and the employer remains ready to take them back on terms to which he shall agree.⁷ Thus a strike does not completely terminate the employer-employee relationship,⁸ and is not a bona fide dissolution of contractual relations,⁹ and ordinarily is not intended by those engaged in it to be a complete severance of the relationship.¹⁰

During a strike the employer-employee relationship is temporarily suspended,¹¹ and it has been said that one of the outstanding characteristics of the strike, as that term is employed in modern times, is the contention on the part of the employees that, although work has ceased, the employer-employee relationship continues, albeit in a state of belligerent suspension,¹² and one of the controlling ideas running through all of the definitions¹³ is that a strike is a cessation of labor, but not an abandonment of the employment.¹⁴ It follows, therefore, that a strike has, and is intended to have, an entirely different effect from that produced by individuals acting independently, who resign their employment,¹⁵ and, in the common acceptance of the term,¹⁶ it is not a strike for the workmen of an employer to quit his employment and go elsewhere,¹⁷ either singly or in a body,¹⁸ without any intention of returning,¹⁹ whatever may be the reason which moves them to do so.²⁰

Status of strikers. Since the employer-employee relationship is temporarily suspended during a strike, as stated supra p 537 note 11, it follows that a person on strike technically is not an employee,²¹ although it has been said that one of the chief characteristics of a strike²² is that the strikers retain the status of employees during the work stoppage.²³ While a strike does not completely terminate the employer-employee relationship, as stated supra p 537 note 8, a new status does arise,²⁴ and, pending a strike, and as to those who have not finally and in good faith abandoned it, a relationship exists between employer and employee which is neither that of the general relationship of employer and employee, nor again that of employer looking among strangers for employees, or employees seeking from strangers employment,²⁵ and the courts have coined a term to describe the situation,²⁶ and refusal to work,³⁹ or to do any work,⁴⁰ or to resume⁴¹ or continue⁴² work, and it has been said that it is impossible for an employee to be on strike and at work simultaneously.⁴³

Thus, when there is a dispute between the employer and the employee there are two courses open; first, the employees can continue work and negotiate further with the employer, or, second, they can strike in protest; but they may not do both.⁴⁴ However, a strike may be a refusal to work at the customary rate of speed,⁴⁵ and it may include any concerted slow-down or other concerted interruption of operations by employees.⁴⁶

While the essence and basic element of a strike is the stoppage of work, as stated supra p 539 notes 32-34, every stoppage of work is not a strike,⁴⁷ and for a stoppage of work to constitute a strike it must be for the purpose of coercing an employer to grant concessions as to working conditions,⁴⁸ and the stoppage is intended to be temporary, continuing only until the purpose is accomplished,⁴⁹ and until there is compliance with the demand.⁵⁰

Refusal to work without a contract. Where an employee-employer relationship is based on a contract and that contract by its terms expires, so that there is no contractual obligation on the part of the employees to work, and no contractual obligation on the part of the employers to employ the workmen for specified wages and hours and under specified conditions, it has been held that there can be no strike,⁵¹ but it has been said that this decision is based on the fallacious assumption that in the absence of a contractual obligation to work, and to employ for contractually specified wages and hours, and under contractually specified conditions, there can be no strike,⁵² and it has been held that a work stoppage which is the result of a disagreement after negotiations about wages and working conditions is a strike, and it is of no importance that a contract under which the employees had been working had expired.⁵³ Thus a refusal to work without a contract is regarded as a strike.⁵⁴

—Existence of Dispute and Necessity of Demand.

A strike involves a labor dispute,⁵⁵ and necessarily assumes the existence of a grievance,⁵⁶ and one of the characteristics of a strike is that a dispute must exist between the employer and the employees,⁵⁷ since the purpose of a strike is to right an asserted wrong,⁵⁸ and a strike is a means of effecting a reconciliation between an employer and an employee when a controversy has arisen.⁵⁹ The necessity for a lawful trade dispute is illustrated in cases where a dispute once existed but has ceased to exist,⁶⁰ for, when a trade dispute ceases to exist, continued acts of interference with the business of the employee can no longer be justified as lawful incidents of an existing strike, as stated infra p 545 note 15.

A demand for some concession is one of the ingredients of a strike,⁶¹ and it is sometimes regarded as a condition precedent to a strike that a demand be made, directed to the employer by, or on behalf of, the employees.⁶² There is, however, an alternative;⁶³ there must either be such a demand or the stoppage of work, after it occurs, must be used to gain concessions from the employer.⁶⁴ Thus it has been said that it is not a strike if employees temporarily stop work without making a demand upon the employer or using the stoppage as a means of exacting concessions from him even though the stoppage is against his will.⁶⁵

—Coercion, Compulsion, or Persuasion. A strike is generally regarded as coercive;⁶⁶ a coercive measure;⁶⁷ a means of coercion,⁶⁸ extortion,⁶⁹ or compulsion.⁷⁰ It is a means of enforcing compliance with some demand made on the employer,⁷¹ and

It first becomes incumbent upon the employees or their representatives to make a demand upon the employer, in order to lay the basis for a refusal, and such view is in harmony with the fundamental thought underlying the definition of a strike under the common acceptance of the term, and it logically follows that it is contemplated that a strike exists after the demands of the employees are made and refused, as the result of which the employees are withdrawn from the employment. —International Union, U.A.W.A.A.F. of L. time. While it is the concerted withdrawal of the employees which makes the strike,⁸² it is the concerted refusal of employees to work for their employer, rather than the concerted cessation of work, which is sometimes emphasized as the essential of a strike.⁸³

—Picketing. It is stated in 70 C.J.S. p 1056 note 88 that picketing is an activity which is not necessarily restricted to labor situations, and it is not considered an essential element of a strike,⁸⁴ and neither is it the strike itself,⁸⁵ since it is common knowledge that a strike may or may not be accompanied by the establishment of a picket line.⁸⁶ Picketing and persuading others to keep away from an employer are but incidentals of a strike.⁸⁷

Number of Persons Involved. There is a difference of opinion as to whether a work stoppage by one person can properly be regarded as a strike.⁸⁸ On the one hand, it has been said that a strike may be carried on by one man,⁸⁹ and that, while a cessation of work by the concerted action of a large number of employees may more easily accomplish the object of the work stoppage than if it is by one person, there is, in fact, no fundamental difference in the principle involved as far as the number of persons involved is concerned, and thus, if the act is the same, and the purpose to be accomplished is the same, there is a strike, whether one or more than one have ceased to work.⁹⁰ Furthermore, since one of the chief characteristics of a strike is that the strikers retain the status of employees during the work stoppage, as stated supra p 538 notes 22, 23, a single individual who stops work temporarily for the sole purpose of coercing a change in his working conditions should not, merely because he is not acting in concert with others, lose his status as an employee, but such would be the result if one worker could not strike.⁹¹

On the other hand, it has been held that the refusal of one person to work is not a strike,⁹² the rationale being that a strike involves a combination of persons and not a single individual.⁹³ While the courts define the word "strike" in terms which indicate that it is the action of employees,⁹⁴ work-down strike" and the "slow-down strike,"⁴ and the "mass strike;"⁵ and there is also the "sympathetic strike" which is otherwise known in this country as the "boycott;"⁶ and some strikes have been referred to as "strikes on the installment plan."⁷

Termination of Strike. When a strike is at an end as a matter of law is a question, it has been said, on which conflicting views have been expressed.⁸ Technically, and as a practical matter, as soon as the striker's places are filled with permanent competent workers, the strikers are no longer employees of the employer and there is no longer in existence a strike by employees,⁹ but all courts do not hold this view.¹⁰ Some courts have likened a strike to the principle governing a blockade in time of war; in order to be lawful it must be effective,¹¹ and it has been said that any remedy by way of maintaining a strike is limited to the period of effective maintenance of the strike.¹² Thus, when a strike becomes merely nominal, without substantial effect on the business of the employer, or genuine hope of success,¹³ a trade dispute ceases to exist,¹⁴ and continued acts of interference with the business of the employer can no longer be justified as lawful incidents of an existing strike.¹⁵ Various statements have been made to the effect that a strike is terminated when the strikers' places have been filled with competent men, and the employer's business is operating in a normal manner and to a normal extent;¹⁶ and that a strike is deemed to be at an end when conditions are such that the business of the employer is not materially affected by it, and there are no reasonable grounds for believing that a continuance thereof will materially affect his business.¹⁷ However, it has also been stated that a strike continues as long as the workers have not abandoned it by taking permanent employment elsewhere or otherwise, even though the employer has

A strike bears some resemblance to a blockade in international law.—Samuel Hertzig Corporation v. Gibbs, 3 N.E.2d 831, 832, 295 Mass. 229.

"It is reasoned that if the employer is unable to obtain the services of a sufficient number of competent workmen to operate his business, or can obtain them only at an unusual or exorbitant wage, or employs them only temporarily and for the purpose of disrupting the strike, or if he is not able by reason of the pressure to carry on his business in a normal manner, the effectiveness of the strike has been demonstrated. It exists as a fact. But the strike may not prove effective. The demands of the strikers may not appeal to the reason either of the workmen in the trade or the patronizing public. The employer may be able to employ at a usual wage a sufficient number of qualified workmen. The public may continue, as theretofore, to bestow its patronage. The strike and the picketing may fail to exert economic pressure; and the facts and circumstances may show that there is no reasonable ground for belief that the purpose for which the strike was called will be accomplished. Consequently, the strike, in contemplation of law, is at an end."—Motion Pic-

filled their places and is operating at normal capacity,¹⁸ and that where employees have gone out on strike, that strike is deemed to continue to exist, and the strikers are deemed to continue to be employees or quasi employees, as long as the strike has not been abandoned, or terminated by mutual consent, and there exists some reasonable possibility that the purposes of the strike, or some of them, may still be attained.¹⁹

Cross References. Strikes are treated in various connections throughout the title Master and Servant since an established employer-employee relationship is an outstanding characteristic or essential ingredient of a strike, as stated supra p 536 note 91 et seq.

The failure of an employer to state in an advertisement, proposal, or contract for employment that a strike exists, where such is the case, is a statutory offense in some jurisdictions, as stated in Master and Servant § 14. For other specific references see the index to the title Master and Servant.

However, strikes are not treated exclusively in the title Master and Servant, but are treated in other places throughout this work, and thus, since the early conception of a strike was as a conspiracy to be dealt with as such, in either a criminal or a civil action, as stated supra p 543 note 34, the treatment of strikes as civil conspiracies is set out in Conspiracy § 11, and as criminal conspiracies in Conspiracy § 70.

It is sometimes contended that a strike is in violation of anti-trust legislation, or is contrary to common law provisions relating to monopolies, and the law in this connection is discussed in Monopolies § 79.

Unemployment compensation laws frequently contain provisions disqualifying persons who are unemployed by reason of strikes or other labor disputes from the benefits of such compensation laws, and such provisions are treated in Social Security and Public Welfare §§ 173-196. Under some unemployment compensation statutes a claimant will not be denied benefits for refusing to accept a position offered where it is vacant due directly to a strike or other labor dispute as stated in Social Security and Public Welfare § 199. Injunctive relief against strikes is discussed in Injunctions § 147. For other specific references to the treatment of strikes throughout this work see the indexes to the various titles and consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

In the language of bridge men and civil engineers the term "stringers" has an accepted meaning,²⁸ being used interchangeably with "joists."²⁹

STRIP. In popular usage as well as in the metallurgical sense,³⁰ the noun "strip" denotes a long, flat, and narrow piece, as contradistinguished from a long thin cylinder, like a wire;³¹ a narrow piece, comparatively long.³²

In the metallurgical sense the noun "strip" is further defined as meaning an ingot prepared for rolling into plates; a narrow flat bar of iron or steel; hence iron or steel in strips (more fully, strip iron or steel).³³

As a verb, "strip" is defined as meaning to deprive of utterly; rob; despoil; plunder; as, to strip a man of his wealth.³⁴ It has been held synonymous with "deprive" see 26 C.J.S. p 977 note 67.2.

Phrases employing the term in its various forms are set out in the note.³⁵

STRIPPER. One who strips, in any sense; any implement or device for stripping something.³⁶

STRONG. A relative term³⁷ having reference to the medium of the class to which it is applied,³⁸ and susceptible to degrees of comparison.³⁹ The word denotes strength,⁴⁰ and is defined as meaning, cogent; powerful; forcible; calculated to make a deep or effectual impression on the mind.⁴¹

As used in a representation for the purpose of securing credit it has been construed to mean financially strong or able.⁴²

STRUCTURAL. Of, or pertaining to, structure or a structure.⁴³

STRUCTURE. It has been said that the word "structure" is very comprehensive,⁴⁴ and one of the broadest terms in the English language,⁴⁵ and that it may be used in a broad sense or in a more restricted sense.⁴⁶

Primarily,⁴⁷ "structure" means a thing built,

erected, or fabricated;⁴⁸ that which is built or constructed;⁴⁹ something constructed or built,⁵⁰ as a building, a dam, or a bridge.⁵¹ In its broadest⁵² and widest⁵³ sense "structure" means any construction;⁵⁴ any production or piece of work artificially built up, or composed of parts joined together in some definite manner;⁵⁵ and when the term is applied to a material thing made by human labor, it means something composed of parts or portions which have been put together by human exertion.⁵⁶

In a more restricted sense,⁵⁷ the word "structure" is ordinarily understood⁵⁸ to mean a building⁵⁹ of any kind,⁶⁰ especially a building of some

While a structure is defined to be a production composed of parts artificially joined together according to plan, and designed to accomplish a definite purpose,⁶⁴ it has been said that it may well be doubted whether such a definition now precisely and truly describes a structure as that word is generally and customarily used,⁶⁵ since the term ordinarily carries with it the idea of size, weight, and strength, as stated infra p 549 note 69, and has come to mean anything composed of parts capable of resisting heavy weights or strains, and artificially joined together for some special use.⁶⁶

From an engineering point of view "structure" is technically defined as any artificial construction in which all the component parts are intended to be and remain in equilibrium, and at rest relatively to each other.⁶⁷

The word "structure" usually refers to a permanent stationary erection,⁶⁸ and ordinarily carries with it the idea of size, weight, and strength,⁶⁹ and it has been said that the strength of any structure consists in its ability under any given circumstances to remain in a condition of stability and equilibrium; that is, its ability to resist the breaking or displacement of any of its parts, its ability to sustain without failure its own weight, together with all loads and stresses imposed on it.⁷⁰

A structure may be below the surface of the ground as well as above it,⁷¹ and it may be a part of another larger structure, and in reference to it constitute but a part of a structure.⁷²

Although a building is always a structure,⁷³ all structures are not necessarily buildings,⁷⁴ and many things may be termed structures which are not buildings.⁷⁵ It has been said that a structure is a building even though the sides are not inclosed or walled in.⁷⁶

The word "structure" has been held to include a hotel, apartment house, office building, railroad station, theatre, and any other building,⁷⁷ and it also includes various other objects,⁷⁸ such as a bill-

SUBFLOW. As applied to a surface stream the term may be defined as those waters which slowly find their way through the sand and gravel constituting the bed of the stream, or the lands under or immediately adjacent to the stream, and are themselves a part of the surface stream.³⁸

SUBFREIGHTS. An expression in common use and easily understood, embracing all freights which a charterer stipulates to receive for the carriage of goods, whether he takes the ship by demise or otherwise.³⁹

SUBINFEUDATION. The system which the feudal tenants introduced of granting smaller estates out of those which they held of their lord, to be held of themselves as inferior lords. As this system was proceeding downward ad infinitum, and depriving the lords of their feudal profits, it was suppressed by the statute Quia Emptores, 18 Edward I. ch. 1, and instead of it alienation in the modern sense was introduced, so that thenceforth the alienee held of the same chief lord and by the same services that his alienor before him held.⁴⁰ However, even after the statute of Quia Emptores was enacted it was recognized that the chief lord might forego the benefit of the statute by authorizing his tenant to make a subinfeudation, that is, grant lands to be holden of himself; but this could not be done by a mesne lord on account of the interest of his superiors.⁴¹

SUBIRRIGATION. A natural process by percolation through the soil.⁴³

SUBJACENT. Lying under or below; also, being lower, although not directly below; as, hills and subjacent valleys; occurring below the surface; as, a subjacent fire.⁴⁴ land platted and subdivided into smaller tracts, named and designated as lots or blocks, the official plat of which is duly authenticated and recorded in the recorder's office. Each may cover new lands thereby added to or included within the corporate limits of the city or either cover lands already within the city but now platted and subdivided from acreage into lots and blocks as a new plat or subdivision of the platted portion of the city or be an addition to the subdivided and platted portion of the city. So lands may be subdivided and platted, named, and the plat authenticated and filed for record in the recorder's office, even though outside the corporate limits of any city or town. We refer to these matters to point out that the words are not inherently different or suggestive of different things. In common parlance, they are frequently used interchangeably."—Ferguson v. Mathis, supra.

Abolished by statute Quia Emptores

(1) The statute Quia Emptores in the year 1290 was designed to prevent the disadvantageous effects of subinfeudation to the overlord. The statute provided that when the feudal holder of the land aliened it his grantee should nevertheless hold directly from the overlord, so that the rights of the latter with respect to escheat and other incidents of the feudal tenure should not be defeated—Jones v. Magruder, D.C.Md., 42 F. Supp. 193, 196.

(2) In the year 1290 the custom of subinfeudation had become intolerable, whereupon the statute of Quia Emptores was enacted. Thereafter no new tenure could be created on feoffment in fee simple, unless by the king or a tenant in capite, because by the force of the statute all lands and tenements so granted were held of the chief lord of the same fee by such services and customs as the feoffer held before. The effect of this statute was to prevent subinfeudation, and to permit alienation of lands in fee, free and clear of any new tenure.—Kavanaugh v. Cohoes Power & Light Corporation, 187 N.Y. SUBJECT. The term "subject" is derived from the Latin "subjectus,"⁴⁵ and, like many other words in the English language, has various meanings,⁴⁶ and a large signification, often embracing different kinds, different classes, and various modes, all belonging to the general subject.⁴⁷ Thus, in determining the intent with which the word is used, the meaning most suited to the context should be chosen.⁴⁸

As a Noun

The word "subject" is defined generally as meaning that concerning which something is asserted⁴⁹ or done;⁵⁰ that concerning which anything is said or done;⁵¹ that which is spoken of;⁵² that which is taken up for discussion;⁵³ that on which any operation, either mental or material, is performed;⁵⁴ that which is brought under thought or examination;⁵⁵ the theme of a proposition or discourse;⁵⁶ the thing or person treated of;⁵⁷ the thing forming the groundwork.⁵⁸ It is also defined as meaning that of which anything is affirmed or predicated;⁵⁹ or more specifically, a word or word group denoting that of which anything is predicated.⁶⁰

As used with respect to a person, the word "subject" is frequently applied to one who is under the governing power of another,⁶¹ specifically a person owing allegiance to a monarch;⁶² and it refers also to one who owes obedience to the laws, and is entitled to partake of the elections into the public office.⁶³

The noun "subject" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "item" see 48 C.J.S. p 788 note 10, "purpose" see 73 C.J.S. p 1261 note 96, and "substance,"⁶⁴ and it has been compared with, or distinguished from, "provision" see 73 C.J.S. p 269 note 35, "substance,"⁶⁵ and "transient."⁶⁶ "Subject" and "object" have been held to be equivalent, and the terms have also been distinguished, see 67 C.J.S. p 11, notes 24-28.

While the words "subject" and "citizen" have been regarded as words of different import, the term "citizen," in the United States, is analogous to the term "subject" in the common law, see Citizens § 1 a.

With reference to nations the terms "inhabitants," "people," and "subjects" are sometimes used indiscriminately as synonyms, see 43 C.J.S. p 392 note 89.

The meaning of constitutional provisions prohibiting a statute from embracing more than one subject is treated in Statutes §§ 217, 218. Reference to the word "subjects" as used in various alien enemy statutes is made in the C.J.S. title War § 12, also 67 C.J. p 349 note 89.

As a Verb

The term "subject," which is frequently employed with the preposition "to,"⁶⁷ is variously defined as meaning to bring under control, power, or domin-

Subject matter. A term of different meanings as used by the courts in treating with different problems.⁸¹ It is defined generally⁸² as meaning the cause;⁸³ the object;⁸⁴ the thing in controversy;⁸⁵ the thing in dispute;⁸⁶ the subject or matter presented for consideration;⁸⁷ the matter or thought presented for consideration in some statement or discussion;⁸⁸ the right which one party claims as against the other, as the right to divorce, of ejectment, to recover money, to have

The term "subject matter" in connection with actions generally is treated in Actions § 1 i, and with respect to questions of jurisdiction generally in Courts § 23, Federal Courts § 4 b, Equity §§ 79-83, and Admiralty §§ 23-65.

Subject to. The expression "subject to" has no well-defined meaning.⁹⁰ It is a term of qualification,⁹¹ being employed usually to qualify something substantially already created,⁹² and embodying the command that the act shall not be effective until the condition is complied with.⁹³ It normally connotes, in legal usage, an absence of personal obligation,⁹⁴ and as ordinarily used does not create affirmative rights.⁹⁵

As defined by lexicographers,⁹⁶ and in its ordinary sense,⁹⁷ the term "subject to" means subordinate,⁹⁸

§ 1. Definition and Nature

Submission of controversy without action is a consent proceeding, a substitute for an action, and the agreed statement stands on the same footing as a special verdict, but is entirely different from an agreed statement of facts used merely as evidence on the trial.

Submission of controversy is a procedure whereby the parties, without instituting an action,¹ submit to any court that would otherwise have jurisdiction, as discussed infra § 3, any matter of real controversy between them for final determination, as considered infra § 4, on any agreed statement of facts, signed by the parties, as discussed infra § 6, and supported by an affidavit that the controversy is real and the proceeding in good faith to determine the rights of the parties, as discussed infra § 7. Although the practice has been said to be unknown at common law,² and to be of statutory origin there is authority to the effect that in some jurisdictions of the United States at least it has become by usage a part of the common law.⁴

the proceeding being to dispose of the formalities of a summons, complaint, and answer,⁷ and on an agreed statement of the facts to submit the case to the court for decision.⁸ The agreed statement stands on the same footing as a special verdict,⁹ and is entirely different from an agreed statement of facts used merely as evidence on the trial,¹⁰ which is simply the result of an agreement of the parties as to what the evidence in the case will prove.¹¹ The practice is encouraged whenever the facts can be agreed on.¹²

Distinguished from trying a case before court without jury. Submission of controversy without action is quite distinct from the trial of a case by consent before the court without a jury. In the former case the court is in the exercise of its inherent functions to decide questions of law submitted to it, while in a trial before the court, sitting, by consent, without a jury, it deals with the facts in all respects as a jury would do.¹³

§ 2. Statutory Provisions

Where the practice is of statutory origin, whether or not submission of a controversy without action is authorized must be determined from the provisions of the statute granting the right, and such statute must be strictly construed and its requirements strictly observed.

Where the practice is of statutory origin, whether or not submission of a controversy without action is authorized must be determined from the provisions of the statute granting the right.¹⁴ Such statutes must be strictly construed,¹⁵ and their requirements must be observed¹⁶ strictly.¹⁷

§ 3. Courts Having Jurisdiction

What courts have jurisdiction of a controversy submitted without action depends on the statutes regulating the proceeding, and, under some statutes, but not others, the court must be one which would have had jurisdiction if an action had been brought.

What courts have jurisdiction of a controversy submitted without action depends on the statutes regulating the proceeding.¹⁸ Under some statutes the court must be one which would have had jurisdiction if an action had been brought;¹⁹ and, where a court has only appellate jurisdiction, the agreed case and the decision of the court below should be regularly certified into the appellate court, which otherwise has no jurisdiction of the case.²⁰ However, under other statutes, the submission must be tried and judgment rendered by an appellate court.²¹ The submission of facts must represent a statement of a controversy existing between the parties, on the determination of which a judgment which the court would have jurisdiction to enter in an action brought to determine the controversy could be granted.²² In accordance with the general rule, as discussed in Courts § 85, jurisdiction of the subject matter cannot be conferred by the consent of the parties,²³ and a court cannot take

§ 4. Controversies Which May Be Submitted

The controversies which may be submitted depend on the statutes granting the right, and under some statutes any question may be submitted which might be the subject of a civil action or special proceeding between the parties.

The controversies which may be submitted depend on the statutes granting the right.²⁵ Under some statutes any question may be submitted which might be the subject of a civil action between the parties,²⁶ and under these provisions questions which could not be the subject of an action between the parties cannot be entertained.²⁷ While it has been held that a special proceeding is not an action within the meaning of such provisions,²⁸ controversies which might be the subject of a special proceeding may be submitted where the statute expressly includes such controversies.²⁹ Submission on an agreed statement of facts is not available where the relief sought cannot be given,³⁰ or the controversy involves a matter of public policy and the power of the parties to create, limit, or define their legal rights is restricted by law in the public interest;³¹ but, where the controversy affects only the individual or private rights of the parties thereto, there may be submission on an agreed statement of facts.³²

The controversy must present a question of law,³³ must be real,³⁴ and must be one which can be followed by an effective judgment,³⁵ and not a merely colorable dispute suggested in order to have the law in the case ascertained,³⁶ or a mere abstract or moot question presented to get the advice of the Removal of cloud on title

Submission of controversy on an agreed statement of facts was proper as an action in the nature of a proceeding for equitable relief to remove a cloud on title and to remove the onus of an illegal levy which illegality was not manifest on the record and could be established only by extrinsic evidence.—Cooper Union for Advancement of Science and Art v. City of New York, 71 N.Y.S.2d 204, 272 App.Div. 438, appeal and reargument denied 74 N.Y.S.2d 404, 272 App. Div. 1004, affirmed 81 N.E.2d 108, 298 N.Y. 578.

Construction of trust indenture

Court was required to accept submission of controversy on agreed statement of facts concerning the construction of an indenture of trust.—Empire Properties Corp. v. Manufacturers Trust Co., 28 N.Y.S.2d 376, 262 App.Div. 166, reversed on other grounds 43 N.E.2d 25, 288 N.Y. 242.

Declaratory judgment action

(1) The court may render judgment on an agreed statement of facts in a case where the parties could have maintained an action for a declaratory judgment.—Goldstein v. (2) So, submission of the controversy on an agreed statement of facts is an appropriate remedy where only the meaning of a statute was in question.—Smith v. New York State Emp. Retirement System, 61 N.Y.S.2d 590, 270 App.Div. 462.

court,³⁷ the decision of which will not terminate the controversy between the parties,³⁸ and by which only a preliminary question will be settled, leaving the merits undecided;³⁹ and the court will not entertain a question of law presented by agreement of the parties, which does not arise out of the facts in the case.⁴⁰

§ 5. Persons Who May Submit Controversy and Parties

With the exception of persons not sui juris, all persons and corporations, including municipal corporations, having any matter in controversy, may agree to its submission, but the submission can be made only by interested parties or persons to be affected by the judgment, or by their attorneys, and a submission will not be entertained when a necessary party to the complete determination of the controversy is lacking.

With the exception of persons not sui juris,⁴¹ all persons and corporations, including municipal corporations, having any matter in controversy, may agree to its submission.⁴² However, the submission can be made only by interested parties, or by persons to be affected by the judgment,⁴³ or by their attorneys.⁴⁴ A submission will not be entertained when it appears that an infant is legally interested,⁴⁵ or when a necessary party to the complete determination of the controversy is lacking.⁴⁶ On the other hand, a person who has no interest in the subject matter is not a necessary party and need not be joined.⁴⁷

Where necessary parties are lacking, the court cannot direct additional parties to be made in invitum to cure the defect,⁴⁸ and it has been held that an order by which a third person is made a party to an agreed case without his consent is without authority of law, and that all the proceedings thereunder are coram non judge.⁴⁹ Although it has been held that, where the decision of a controversy submitted will indirectly affect persons other than the parties and property other than that involved in the submission, the court will be very careful to insist on the observance of all the forms of law intended to prevent the submission of any but real controversies;⁵⁰ it has also been held that, if the demand is genuine, an agreed case will not be considered fictitious merely because it is so worded as to ignore the rights of third persons.⁵¹

Designation of parties. On a submission of controversy the parties should be designated as plaintiffs and defendants.⁵²

Future rights

(1) It has been held that questions in anticipation of future events will not be determined and, hence, the court will not undertake to construe a city charter before it becomes effective.—Gish v. Village of Peekskill, supra.

(2) However, it has also been held, notwithstanding controversy submitted might never arise since action taken by third person might prevent its arising, where both sides chose to treat matter as genuine existing controversy, it was proper to settle matter by answering questions submitted.—Whaley v. Monroe County, 257 N.Y.S. 296, 235 App.Div. 334.

Case is not moot, where proceeding presents actual controversy involving adverse interests between parties.—Joplin Waterworks Co. v. Jasper County, 38 S.W.2d 1068, 327 Mo. 964.

§ 6. Requisites of Submission

Except as controlled by statute, submission of a controversy without action need not follow any particular form, but must contain an agreement as to the facts which are admitted, and must be absolute and unequivocal, stipulating all facts necessary to a complete determination of the controversy, and showing the kind of action, the relief sought, authority to enter judgment, and the general nature of the judgment to be entered.

Except as controlled by statute,⁵³ submission of a controversy without action need not follow any particular form.⁵⁴ The submission must contain an agreement as to the facts which are admitted,⁵⁵ for the court cannot be required to take the evidence in a case and ascertain the facts from the testimony which is thus admitted.⁵⁶ The agreement must be absolute, without reservations, and unequivocal,⁵⁷ and must stipulate all of the facts necessary to a complete determination of the controversy.⁵⁸ All the facts agreed on must be distinctly stated, and not left to inference,⁵⁹ so that the court may have nothing to do but pronounce the law arising out of them.⁶⁰ A controversy submitted for the opinion of the court containing mere evidence of facts is insufficient.⁶¹

The agreement of facts must show the kind of action,⁶² and a cause of action,⁶³ jurisdiction of the court over the parties,⁶⁴ the relief sought,⁶⁵ authority to enter judgment,⁶⁶ and the general nature of the judgment to be entered,⁶⁷ although a prayer for judgment has been held unnecessary.⁶⁸ If the case agreed is such that the court cannot render judgment either for plaintiff or for defendant, as the court might conclude the law to be for the one or the other, the case agreed is defective, and the court will refuse to render any judgment and will proceed with the case as if no such agreement had been entered into.⁶⁹

The submission must present a bona fide justiciable controversy complete in itself.⁷⁰ The court

53. "Question in difference" must be set forth under a statute so providing and this requirement is not satisfied by merely setting forth the "contentions" of the parties.—Bishop v. Mahiko, 35 Hawaii 608.

54. Stipulation held to constitute agreed case

Stipulations signed by corporation's attorneys, the attorneys of village having judgment for taxes against corporation, the attorneys of county, holder of tax deed covering corporation's property, and attorney of assignee of purchaser at sale by trustee under trust deed, constituted an "agreed case" for determination of validity of sale by trustee.—*In re Davis Bros. will dismiss a case agreed to by the parties when the agreed statement of facts is incomplete,⁷¹ or where an essential fact is in dispute,⁷² or a decision cannot be made without drawing inferences of fact,⁷³ or considering facts not submitted,⁷⁴ or when, through some fraud, accident, mistake, or misapprehension, the statement embraces matters which did not exist.⁷⁵ However, where the facts submitted present a justiciable controversy and are sufficient to enable judgment to be given with no question that the issue is not bona fide or collusive, the court cannot decline to hear and decide the controversy submitted on the ground that there may be other and additional facts which, if included, might change the decision on the issue as presented,⁷⁶ or on the ground that a claim for punitive damages raises issues of fact not proper for determination on submission of a controversy.⁷⁷

Documents annexed to the agreed statement and referred to therein may be treated as part of the agreed statement.⁷⁸

Signature. Under some statutes it has been held that in the case of natural parties the agreement for submission must be signed by the parties, and not by the attorneys, to give the court jurisdiction,⁷⁹ or, if signed by the attorneys, there should be such evidence of authority so to represent the party as to prevent any question arising in the future as to the authorized representation of the parties before the court.⁸⁰

§ 7. — Affidavit of Reality of Controversy

Statutes requiring that the agreed case must be supported by a proper affidavit must be strictly followed in order to confer jurisdiction on the court, and cannot be waived by the parties.

Statutes relating to the submission of a controversy without action and providing that the agreed case must be supported by an affidavit that the controversy is real and the proceeding in good faith to determine the rights of the parties must be strictly followed,⁸¹ and cannot be waived by the parties.⁸² Such affidavit is necessary to confer jurisdiction on the court,⁸³ and, if not made, the decision of the court is not a judgment which may be enforced or appealed,⁸⁴ but is, at most, a mere award as in a common-law arbitration.⁸⁵ Ordinarily, when the affidavit is not filed, the proceeding will be dismissed,⁸⁶ or a judgment entered thereon will be set aside⁸⁷ or vacated.⁸⁸ It has also been held that the affidavit should state that the court would have jurisdiction if the proceeding was by summons.⁸⁹

By whom made. The affidavit must be made by a party, and not by his attorney,⁹⁰ when there is a natural person, a party, who may make it;⁹¹ and it has been held that it is not necessary that such affidavit be made by more than one of the parties.⁹²

An agreed case does not require any pleadings, and should they be filed they may be disregarded.

An agreed case does not require any pleadings,⁹³ and should they be filed they must be disregarded,⁹⁴ for an agreed case takes the place of pleading.⁹⁵

§ 9. — Filing and Entry of Agreement on Record

Under some statutes the agreement to submit the controversy must be entered on the record of the case, but it has been held that noncompliance does not deprive the court of jurisdiction, and it is sufficient compliance if the agreement is entered on the record as part of the decree.

Under some statutes the agreement to submit the controversy must be entered on the record of the case.⁹⁶ Such provisions have been held to give the clerk of the court authority or direction to enter the agreement of record,⁹⁷ and it has been held that noncompliance does not deprive the court of jurisdiction.⁹⁸ It is a sufficient compliance with the statute if the agreement is entered on the record as part of the decree.⁹⁹ Apart from such statutes, it has been held that, where an agreement is not entered on the record, an appeal will be dismissed.¹

§ 10. Operation and Effect of Submission

A party by submitting a controversy is estopped to object to review on the ground that the controversy was not one which could lawfully be submitted, but is not precluded from objecting to want of jurisdiction, and, if after an action is commenced, the parties agree on a submission, the other case should be dismissed or discontinued.

§ 11. Dismissal and Cancellation of Agreement for Submission

Although it has been held that the court cannot vacate the submission, it has also been held that the court will dismiss the submission where it may properly decline deciding the questions submitted, where it appears that a decision would work injustice, where there has been a failure to observe the statutory provisions relating to the submission, where collusion is found, or the controversy has become moot, or no enforceable judgment can be entered.

Although it has been held that the court cannot vacate the submission,¹⁰ it has also been held that the court will dismiss the submission where it may properly decline deciding the questions submitted,¹¹ where it appears that a decision would work injustice,¹² where the effect of the decision would be to modify or change a decree of another court in the state of equal jurisdiction,¹³ where there has been a failure to observe the statutory provisions relating to the submission,¹⁴ where collusion is found,¹⁵ or where the controversy, while sub judice, has become moot,¹⁶ or where no enforceable judgment can be entered.¹⁷ Where neither the relief sought nor any other appropriate relief may be given, the court will dismiss the proceeding.¹⁸

The court will not dismiss the submission because defendant has since become a voluntary bankrupt,¹⁹ or because the submission is faulty in some respects,²⁰ especially on motion of the party responsible for the defect;²¹ but, where a case agreed is too imperfectly stated for the court to proceed to judgment, it will be set aside and new proceedings ordered.²² The submission of a controversy will not be dismissed on the motion of one who is not a party to it.²³

Cancellation of agreement. A contract submitting an agreed case may be canceled by a suit in equity for fraud, duress, or mutual mistake;²⁴ but such relief will not be granted where there is an adequate remedy at law.²⁵

Opinion as to rights and relations

(1) In the absence of statutory authorization, the court will not enter a judgment simply answering questions.—Honolulu Rapid Transit Co. v. Territory, supra.

§ 13. — Scope of Inquiry and Powers of Court in General

- a. In general
- b. Inferences from agreement

a. In General

In a submission of controversy the court cannot for itself determine issues of fact, but only questions of law, and in determining the legal question presented is limited to a consideration of the facts appearing in the agreed statement, which will be construed without favor to either party with a view to determining and giving effect to the intention of the parties.

In a submission of controversy the court cannot for itself determine issues of fact.³⁰ Only the determination of questions of law³¹ between the parties affecting their interests may be made, and the court cannot go beyond a decision affecting such interests;³² and the inquiry is confined to the question put in issue,³³ although under an agreement that the court may make any order or judgment in the case, it has been held that the whole controversy is submitted without limitation.³⁴ Where a controversy is submitted without action, a presumption exists that the agreed statement of facts contains all the facts on which the parties intend to rely to sustain their contentions,³⁵ and the agreed case is to be considered as showing the facts of the controversy, even though they should constitute a different cause of action in favor of plaintiff from that shown by an accompanying complaint.³⁶

The court in determining the legal question presented is limited to a consideration of the facts appearing in the agreed statement.³⁷ The court has no power to permit either party against the objection of the other to adduce other facts or introduce evidence of any character;³⁸ and, where all the facts necessary for a proper determination of the question are not before the court, it will decline to answer the question,³⁹ and it cannot direct an additional statement of facts to be made in invitum to cure the defect;⁴⁰ nor can it appoint a master to report the facts in the case.⁴¹ Where, without proof of further facts, plaintiff's case is not made out, the court ought simply to render judgment against plaintiff without further suggestions,⁴² and it is error to make an order based on the supposition that plaintiff might establish other facts.⁴³

Legal conclusions or matters of law included in the statement of facts are not binding on the court,⁴⁴ and will be disregarded.⁴⁵ Neither party can be allowed to withdraw from the agreement without the consent of the other;⁴⁶ and an application to the court of a party to an agreed case to be relieved from his agreement and for a trial of the questions of fact is to be considered under the rules of law applicable to petitions for a new trial.⁴⁷

Construction of statement or agreement. The statement of facts must be construed without favor to either party,⁴⁸ with the view to determining and giving effect to the intention of the parties.⁴⁹ The language of the agreement will be given its common, ordinary meaning,⁵⁰ and the agreed statement of facts will be construed as a whole,⁵¹ but the contentions of the parties embodied in the statement of facts cannot be considered as facts.⁵² Where the agreed statement of facts undertakes to exhibit the effect of a probate record in the language of the parties and is ambiguous, the ambiguity will be imputed to the agreement rather than to the probate record.⁵³ Where the agreement sets forth that plaintiffs are entitled to certain real estate except the improvements unless prevented by the facts hereinafter set forth, it was held to be a submission of the title to the real estate, aside from the improvements.⁵⁴

Unless as a matter of law they are necessary inferences, the court cannot draw inferences of fact from controverted or equivocal facts.

Unless as a matter of law they are necessary inferences,⁵⁵ the court cannot draw inferences of fact⁵⁶ from controverted or equivocal facts,⁵⁷ for balancing evidence, or drawing conclusions from circumstances proved, and thereby determining controverted questions of fact are not among the ordinary duties of the court on a submission of controversy;⁵⁸ nor does the assent, or even the request, of the parties, in a case agreed, impose any such duty on the court.⁵⁹ Whenever it appears that a submitted controversy necessarily involves the duty of drawing inferences from inconclusive, equivocal, or evidentiary facts before a legal conclusion can be formed, the issue will not be decided.⁶⁰

§ 14. — Amendment

Generally, an amendment may be allowed when the agreed facts improvidently admit the existence, as a fact, of something which is not a fact, or where sufficient facts are not stated, or no relief was demanded, but under some statutes it has been held that the court has no power to amend an agreed case.

Where there is a clear and palpable mistake in figures or amounts in an agreed case and in the record thereof, it has been held that the court may correct it on the motion or petition of either party,⁶¹ and may allow amendment when the agreed facts improvidently admit the existence, as a fact, of something which is not a fact,⁶² or where sufficient facts are not stated,⁶³ or where no relief was demanded.⁶⁴ However, it has been held that, after a case has been heard and decided and judgment entered, an amendment of the prayer so as to include other relief will not be allowed,⁶⁵ and, after a case has been submitted on agreed facts, the court cannot, without setting aside the submission, allow one party, over the other's objection, to introduce additional facts, the existence of which was known to the former before the submission.⁶⁶ Under some statutes, it has been held that the court has no power to amend an agreed case.⁶⁷

§ 15. Judgment or Decision

The court is bound to render such judgment as the facts call for, whether legal or equitable, but the statutory provisions have been held not to contemplate the entry of judgment by default, or the direction of judgment against an undisclosed defendant, and no further adjudication will be made than affects the interests of the parties.

On submission of controversy the court is bound to render such judgment as the facts call for, whether legal or equitable;⁶⁸ but statutory provisions allowing submission of controversy have been held not to contemplate the entry of a judgment by default,⁶⁹ or the direction of a judgment against an undisclosed defendant.⁷⁰ As there is no trial of facts, as discussed supra § 13, no findings of fact are necessary,⁷¹ although it has been held that a judgment must be considered a determination of both facts and law in favor of the party for whom judgment is given.⁷² The judgment must be on the agreed facts, as discussed in Judgments § 186, and, in accordance with the rule that the court is confined to a determination of questions between the parties affecting their interests, as discussed supra § 13, no further adjudication will be made than affects such interests,⁷³ and no judgment will be pronounced where there are other persons not parties whose rights would be necessarily affected.⁷⁴ Provisions in the submission as to the form of judgment to be entered will be construed and applied so as to give effect to the intention of the parties.⁷⁵

The findings and judgment in a stipulated case, where they conflict with an order of a court providing for the issuance of receiver's certificates, as to their priority, will control as against the order.⁷⁶

Interest will not be included in the amount awarded unless authorized by the submission.⁷⁷

Where the case submitted fails to show what the controversy was, the decision of the court on the question submitted is not appealable. General rules governing the presentation and reservation in the lower court of the grounds of review, matters to be shown by record, and other matters of appeal and error have been applied.

Where the case submitted fails to show what the controversy was, or that there was a controversy between the parties, the decision of the court on the question submitted is not appealable,⁷⁸ although it has been held that, where a controversy involving a question of importance to the public is submitted, the appellate court may properly determine the question of law raised, although the statement of facts is not full enough to enable it to render judgment between the parties.⁷⁹ An appeal does not ordinarily lie from a judgment on submission of a controversy or agreed case except where the state of facts presents questions of law or where the parties do not agree as to the judgment to be entered, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 160. An exception to the decision on the trial of an agreed case is necessary to a review thereof,⁸⁰ and an appeal cannot be taken before judgment below;⁸¹ but, where the parties proposed to file a record of the judgment as an amendment, it was held that on so doing the order remanding the case would be withdrawn and the cause would be allowed to remain on the docket for future hearing as amended;⁸² and, where an order of the inferior court directs that an agreed statement of facts be discharged because of a mistake or misunderstanding, and that a trial be had, the discharge and trial cannot be carried to the appellate court by bill of exceptions before the trial so directed.⁸³

The transcript on appeal must include the agreed statement of facts⁸⁴ and a copy of the affidavit required by statute, showing the reality of the controversy and the good faith of the proceeding.⁸⁵ Review is limited to the stipulated facts and to no others,⁸⁶ and on an appeal from a finding and judgment the court will consider whether there is in the stipulated facts sufficient to support the judgment;⁸⁷ and a determination of the lower court, based on a consideration of the uncontroverted facts, from which contradictory inferences might be drawn, is conclusive on the appellate court.⁸⁸

On appeal the court cannot draw inferences of facts from the stipulated facts,⁸⁹ and, where there is not a concurrence of facts material to the determination of the case, a judgment thereon will be

Inferences which trier of fact might make Reviewing court may determine legal consequences flowing from the agreed facts, but in so doing may not find additional facts even though the submitted facts logically and reasonably admit of further important inferences which a trier of fact might very well draw.—*Town of Pelham v. reversed.⁹⁰ The appellate court will not indulge in any presumption in favor of the judgment of the court below on a case submitted there without action, inasmuch as the upper court has the same means of reaching a correct conclusion of law on the agreed facts of the case as the lower court had.⁹¹ It has been held that the reviewing court has no alternative but to dismiss a submission where it fails to pose any determinative issue of law.⁹²

§ 17. Costs

Where the agreement does not provide for costs, the awarding of costs is discretionary with the court.

Where a cause is submitted by agreement and the submission does not provide for costs, the awarding of costs is discretionary with the court;⁹³ and, although it has been held that the costs should be divided on the dismissal of an agreed case because the facts stated will not warrant a judgment for either party,⁹⁴ or because the case is submitted without plaintiff or defendant,⁹⁵ it has also been held that, where the case is dismissed because there is no agreed statement of facts on which a judgment can be rendered,⁹⁶ or where the submission is dismissed without prejudice to relief by an action,⁹⁷ costs will not be awarded to either party. Where defendants offered to allow judgment for the sum recovered by plaintiff, it has been held that they are entitled to their costs.⁹⁸ The parties may, however, stipulate regarding costs, and, where the submission of the controversy provides that no costs shall be awarded to plaintiff against defendant, the judgment will provide that no costs be recovered,⁹⁹ and, where a submission of controversy provides that judgment shall be given with costs and disbursements, no additional allowance can be made.¹

SUBMIT. The verb² "submit" is defined generally as meaning to present for determination;³ to commit to the discretion or judgment of another.⁴

The legal definition of the word is to propound, as an advocate, a proposition for the approval of the court,⁵ and, as applied to a cause, the word "submit" is in common use,⁶ and means to refer a cause to a court or referee for disposition.⁷ The term is sometimes used as applied to evidence, though not with the same accuracy.⁸

With respect to elections, the word "submit" means to present and leave to the judgment of the qualified voters.⁹

I. DEFINITION AND ORIGIN, BASIS, NATURE, AND PURPOSE OF DOCTRINE IN GENERAL

§ 1. Definition

Subrogation is the substitution of another person in the place of a creditor, so that the person in whose favor it is exercised succeeds to the rights of the creditor in relation to the debt; it is of two kinds, legal and conventional, the former being subrogation which arises by operation of law, and the latter that which arises by contract.

Subrogation may be defined as the substitution of another person in the place of a creditor, so that the person in whose favor it is exercised succeeds to the rights of the creditor in relation to the debt.¹ The term has been defined in more or less similar language in other cases,² and has been used

"Subrogation" in its literal and equitable significance is the demanding of something under the right of another, to which right the claimant is entitled, for the purpose of justice, to be substituted in place of the original holder.—Cooper v. Home Owners' Loan Corp., 126 S.W.2d 112, 197 Ark. 839.

Sale

Subrogation is in effect a sale, and only the sale of a litigious right is prohibited under the law.—Motors Ins. Corp. v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp., La.App., 52 So.2d 311.

"Doctrine of subrogation" is doctrine by which the equities of one are worked out through the legal rights of another.—Subscribers at Casualty Reciprocal Exchange, by Dodson v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 91 S.W.2d 227, 230 Mo.App. 468.

"Subrogated"

(1) When, under rules of equity, one person is substituted for another as creditor, he is "subrogated" to all of such other's rights as creditor.—Verdier v. Marshallville Equity Co., 46 N.E.2d 636, 70 Ohio App. 434.

(2) One who is compelled to pay claim which another should in fairness pay is "subrogated" to creditor's rights against him.—Amalgamated Casualty Ins. Co. v. Winslow, 135 F. 2d 663, 665, 77 U.S.App.D.C. 382.

To "subrogate" is to put into place of another; to substitute.—Eckman v. Arnold Taxi Co., 148 P.2d 677, 679, 64 Cal.App.2d 229.

- c. Purpose

a. Origin and Basis

Subrogation does not owe its origin to statute, custom, or the common law, but it is a creature of equity, adopted by equity from the Roman or the civil law. It is founded on principles of justice and equity, and its operation is governed by principles of equity.

Subrogation does not owe its origin to statute or custom,¹³ nor is it a doctrine of the common law.¹⁴ It originated in equity¹⁵ and is a creature of equity,¹⁶ a doctrine of equity jurisprudence¹⁷

Arm of equity

Subrogation is an arm of equity that may guide or even force one to pay a debt for which an obligation was incurred but which was in whole or in part paid by another.—Fireman's Fund Indem. Co. v. State Compensation Ins. Fund, 209 P.2d 55, 93 Cal.App.2d 408.

to a volunteer.⁹⁵ Thus, where money due on the mortgage is paid by such purchaser, it is in the nature of an equitable assignment, substituting him who pays in the place of the mortgagee,⁹⁶ and it makes no difference whether he took an assignment of the mortgage as a release, or whether a discharge was made and evidence of the debt canceled;⁹⁷ and no proof of intention on his part to keep the mortgage alive is necessary to give him the benefit of it.⁹⁸ The purchaser's right of subrogation to the mortgage he discharged includes its priority over junior liens⁹⁹ of which he did not have actual knowledge,¹ where he was not culpably negligent in failing to learn of the junior lien,² even though he had constructive notice thereof.³ Even where the mortgage is discharged of record, the purchaser may be subrogated thereto as against junior lienors who did not change their position in reliance on the recorded discharge.⁴ Whether one who purchases subject to a mortgage which he discharges is subrogated to the mortgagee's rights

in other security he holds for the payment of the mortgage debt has been held to depend on the equities of the case and whether the price paid by the purchaser, including the discharge of the mortgage, is in excess of the value of the land.⁵ Where the purchaser is compelled to pay a mortgage which was released by a guardian without authority, he is subrogated to the guardian's rights as to the substituted security taken by the guardian,⁶ although he cannot compel the guardian first to resort to such security.⁷ Where a mortgagor conveys the property expressly subject to the mortgage and the purchaser reconveys, with a covenant against encumbrances not excepting the mortgage, and such purchaser satisfies the mortgage, he obtains no right of subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee.⁸

As a general rule, a purchaser who discharges a mortgage or deed of trust which he has assumed is not entitled to subrogation⁹ to the prejudice of a junior lien claimant of whose lien he had actual¹⁰ or constructive¹¹ notice at the time of payment, in

Abstractor liable to purchaser

Where abstractor who issued certificate of title in which it was erroneously shown that certain property was free from mortgages subsequently paid mortgage on property, abstractor was volunteer and not entitled to recover payments made from original mortgagors, in absence of assignment of rights of purchasers for whom abstract was made, since no privity of contract existed between abstractor and original mortgagors, particularly where original mortgagors had notified abstractor they were not liable on mortgage.—Macfarlane v. its operation is governed by principles of equity.²⁰ It rests on the principle that substantial justice should be attained regardless of form,²¹ that is, its basis is the doing of complete, essential, and perfect justice between all the parties without regard to form.²²

b. Nature

Although it has been held that subrogation is an equitable remedy,²³ it has also been said that subrogation is not strictly a remedy,²⁴ but rather that it is an equitable principle through which the benefit of remedies is obtained.²⁵ It is an equitable doctrine,²⁶ under the authorities on the question, and the right thereto is an equitable right,²⁷ not a legal right.²⁸ Subrogation is closely akin to, if not a part of, the equitable principle of "restitution" and "unjust enrichment."²⁹ It is in the nature of a constructive trust, of equitable origin, to serve best the justice of the situation and accord with the intention of the parties.³⁰

(8) Subrogation is predicated on equitable doctrine that one who has indemnified another in pursuance of his obligation to do so is entitled to means of redress held by person indemnified against individual causing loss.—Economy Auto Ins. Co. v. Brown, 79 N.E.2d 854, 334 Ill.App. 579.

The object of subrogation is to promote and accomplish justice and to prevent injustice. It is the mode which equity adopts to compel the ultimate payment of a debt by one who, in justice, equity, and good conscience, should pay it.

a. In General

Legal subrogation arises out of a condition or relationship by operation of law where a person having a liability or a right or a fiduciary relationship in the premises pays a debt due by another under such circumstances that he is in equity entitled to the security or obligation held by the creditors whom he has paid.

Legal subrogation has its rise in equity,³⁹ and arises out of a condition or relationship⁴⁰ by operation of law.⁴¹ So it has been held that legal subrogation arises by operation of law where a person having a liability or a right or a fiduciary relationship in the premises pays a debt due by another under such circumstances that he is in equity entitled to the security or obligation held by the creditors whom he has paid.⁴²

b. Not Dependent on Contract or Privity

The right of legal subrogation does not arise from any contractual relationship between the parties, but takes place as a matter of equity, with or without an agreement to that effect; but a right of true legal subrogation may be provided for in a contract, or a contract may modify or extinguish the right of subrogation.

on, or dependent on, contract⁴⁸ or on the absence of contract,⁴⁹ but is independent of any contractual relations between the parties.⁵⁰ Likewise, the right does not depend on the act of the creditor, but may be independent of him and also of the debtor.⁵¹ However, although the right of subrogation does not flow from a contract expressed or legally implied, it may be dependent on a contract in the sense that it may grow out of conditions resulting from the due observance of a contract.⁵²

in a contract,⁵³ but the exercise of the right will, nevertheless, have its basis in general principles of equity rather than in the contract,⁵⁴ which will be treated as being merely a declaration of principles of law already existing.⁵⁵

Contract as controlling exercise of right. The right of legal subrogation may be modified or extinguished by contract.⁵⁶ The doctrine of subrogation cannot be invoked to override and displace the real contract of the parties,⁵⁷ or where to do so would be inconsistent with the terms thereof,⁵⁸ or where the contract either expressly or by implica-

- b. Necessity for, and requisites of, contract

a. In General

Conventional subrogation arises by act of the parties, wholly independent of any interest in the property which the lender may have to protect, and exists where one person pays the debt of another as the result of an agreement that the liens existing as security for the debt shall be kept alive for his benefit.

Equitable right

Conventional subrogation results from an equitable right springing from an express agreement with the debtor, by which one advances money to pay a claim for the security of which there exists a lien, by which agreement he is to have a lien equal to that paid off, whereupon he is entitled to the benefit of the security which he has satisfied with the expectation of receiving an equal lien.—In re McGuire, D.C. Ohio, 137 F. 967—60 C.J. p 697 note 21 [a].

the payment is made with the express declaration of the subrogation in the release made by the creditor.⁶⁵ As discussed infra § 6 d, conventional subrogation by agreement with the debtor alone will not be allowed to impair the security of the creditor for the remainder of his debt or prejudice innocent third persons having equities of equal rank.

Extent of right. In conventional subrogation the extent of the right is measured by the agreement for subrogation,⁶⁶ and by the rights of the person granting the right.⁶⁷

b. Necessity for, and Requisites of, Contract

Conventional subrogation can take effect only by agreement with the creditor and debtor or either, and there must be a lawful contract therefor, existing at, or prior to, the time of payment, which agreement must be to the effect that the payor shall have the same priority as the holder of the security and be substituted for him. The agreement must be supported by a consideration but need not be in writing and may be express or implied.

Conventional subrogation can take effect only by agreement.⁶⁸ There must be a lawful contract

therefor⁶⁹ existing at, or prior to, the time of payment,⁷⁰ which agreement must be to the effect that the payor shall have the same priority as the holder of the security and be substituted for him.⁷¹

Requisites of contract. The agreement for conventional subrogation, like other agreements, must be supported by a consideration.⁷² It need not be in writing⁷³ and, although in a few jurisdictions it is held that the agreement must be express,⁷⁴ as a general rule it may be either express or implied.⁷⁵ It must concern the debtor or creditor in a particular indebtedness.⁷⁶

Parties to contract. The contract may be between the person to be subrogated and the creditor and debtor or either⁷⁷ but there must, in order to create a conventional subrogation, be an agreement with one or the other,⁷⁸ and the agreement must be with the subrogee.⁷⁹ It is not essential to subrogation by convention that the creditor should be a party to the agreement between the debtor and a third person, provided no intervening rights to the security have occurred.⁸⁰

II. GENERAL PRINCIPLES APPLICABLE TO RIGHT OF SUBROGATION

§ 5. Scope and Extent of Remedy

- a. In general
- b. Tendency to extend scope
- c. Matter of right or discretion
- d. Necessity of equitable right and lawful or meritorious transaction
- e. Limitation of right by legislature

a. In General

No general rule can be laid down which will afford a test in all cases for application of the doctrine of subrogation, and whether or not it is applicable depends on the facts and circumstances of each case as it arises; but ordinarily the remedy is broad enough to include every instance in which one person, not a mere volunteer, pays a debt for which another is primarily liable and which in equity and good conscience should have been discharged by the latter.

It has been said that the nature and grounds of subrogation are very clear but that the difficulties arise in their application to the innumerable complications of business.⁸¹ The doctrine of subrogation applies to a great variety of cases,⁸² but no general rule can be laid down which will afford a test in all cases for its application,⁸³ and whether or not it is applicable depends on the facts and circumstances of each case as it arises.⁸⁴ In general it is applied where demanded by the dictates of equity, justice, and good conscience,⁸⁵ as well as by

Contract rights and tort actions

Subrogation is equitable principle and applies to contract rights as fully as it does to tort actions.—Consolidated Freightways v. Moore, 229 P.2d 882, 38 Wash.2d 427.

Payment by person secondarily liable

The doctrine is most frequently applied to situations where a person only secondarily liable is compelled to pay a debt for which another is directly and primarily liable.—Omicron Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 152 P.2d 716, 21 Wash.2d 703.

public policy,⁸⁶ and the remedy is broad enough to include every instance in which one person, not a mere volunteer, pays a debt for which another is primarily liable and which in equity and good conscience should have been discharged by the latter.⁸⁷ Since the remedy of subrogation is founded in equity, as discussed supra § 2, in its application no attention should be paid to technicalities which are not of an insuperable character,⁸⁸ but the broad equities should always be sought out as far as possible.⁸⁹

remedy for persons who have lost their money,⁹⁰ and the doctrine cannot be extended beyond the settled principles on which it rests.⁹¹ It has its sphere of relief plainly limited by its nature⁹² and it is not intended to be applied in all cases where there is security for a debt, but only in those in which justice demands its application.⁹³ While subrogation is a consequence which equity attaches to certain conditions, those elements or conditions must be present in every instance where subrogation is sought.⁹⁴ Particular elements or conditions include the existence of a superior equity on the part of the person seeking subrogation, discussed

Subrogation ordinarily arises only from the payment by the subrogee of a debt due a third person,⁹⁵ but in some cases the term subrogation has been used to signify the right of a creditor to enforce a claim or lien of his debtor against another notwithstanding the creditor has not paid anything with respect to such claim or lien.⁹⁶ The question whether the remedy of subrogation can be applied primarily concerns only the creditor, the debtor, and the person claiming to be subrogated.⁹⁷

Subrogation to rights of state. Although in a few jurisdictions it has been held otherwise,⁹⁸ as a general rule, the common-law right of a state to preference as a creditor is not so inherent or exclusive in the state as a sovereignty that it cannot be a matter of subrogation.⁹⁹ Thus, a subrogee of a state is entitled to assert the state's preference in the payment of a debt due it from a debtor over other creditors without prior specific liens.¹ A statute for the relief of persons paying certain claims to the state, under color of judicial proceedings, and subrogating such persons to the rights of the state, does not apply where the state was fully paid, and the claim assigned before the passage of the act.²

b. Tendency to Extend Scope

The remedy of subrogation is highly favored and the courts are inclined to extend rather than to restrict the principle, and to give it a liberal application.

The doctrine of subrogation, under the initial guidance of Chancellor Kent,³ has been applied much more extensively in American than in English jurisprudence.⁴ The doctrine is much encouraged and protected.⁵ It is a remedy which is highly favored⁶ and is not so restricted in its application as formerly.⁷ The courts are inclined to extend rather than to restrict the principle⁸ so that, although formerly the right was limited to transactions between principals and sureties,⁹ now it is broad and expansive¹⁰ and has a very liberal application.¹¹ It is no longer confined to cases of suretyship,¹² but the doctrine has been steadily growing and expanding in importance, and becoming more general in its application to various subjects and classes of persons, the principle being modified to meet the circumstances of cases as they have arisen.¹³ So the mere fact that the doctrine of subrogation had not been previously invoked in a similar situation is not a prima facie bar to its applicability.¹⁴

c. Matter of Right or Discretion

The doctrine of subrogation is not a fixed and inflexible rule of law or equity and is not a matter of right, but the granting of the remedy is a matter for judicial discretion to be administered according to the established rules of equity jurisprudence.

The doctrine of subrogation is not a fixed and inflexible rule of law or equity¹⁵ and does not flow from any fixed rule of law;¹⁶ it is not a matter of strict right,¹⁷ but is, according to the authorities on the question, a matter of grace,¹⁸ the operation of which is governed and controlled by the principles of equity.¹⁹ It makes its appeal solely to the conscience of the court.²⁰ However, its application is not controlled alone by the judge's conception of right.²¹ It is to be administered according to the established rules of equity jurisprudence²² and its exercise must be governed by judicial discretion.²³ While subrogation should not be arbitrarily granted,²⁴ the right should not be denied except in the sound judicial discretion of the court based on some definite and adequate reason therefor.²⁵ All who happen at any time to occupy a particular situation are entitled to like rights of subrogation.²⁶

In every case where the doctrine of subrogation is invoked, there must be a concurrence of inherent justice of the case and some principle of equity jurisprudence as recognized and enforced by courts of equity; and the remedy will not be allowed where it would be contrary to public policy, or where it would be of no real benefit to the moving party. The doctrine of subrogation applies only to lawful and meritorious transactions.

As a general rule, there must, in every case where the doctrine of subrogation is invoked, in addition to the inherent justice of the case, concur therewith some principle of equity jurisprudence as recognized and enforced by courts of equity.²⁷ In other words, subrogation will not be enforced unless there is some equitable doctrine on which it can be predicated,²⁸ and only when the applicant

The legislature may limit the right of subrogation.

The legislature may limit the right of subrogation,⁴² and where it declares that such right may be made the subject of contract in one particular instance, and in no other, and makes it criminal to contract for the right of subrogation in other respects, it manifests an intention to limit the right of subrogation to the specified instance.⁴³

§ 6. Application of Maxims of Equity

- a. In general
- b. Superior equity necessary
- c. Freedom from fault
- d. Necessity of fair result

a. In General

The ordinary equity maxims are applicable to the equitable remedy of subrogation, such as the rules that equity will not grant relief where there is an adequate remedy of law, that the plaintiff must come into court with clean hands, and that he who seeks equity must do equity.

The ordinary equity maxims are applicable to the equitable remedy of subrogation.⁴⁴ Thus, subrogation is not allowed where there is an adequate remedy at law,⁴⁵ and, as in other cases of equitable relief, the party seeking subrogation must not be guilty of laches, as discussed infra § 66; and the familiar rule in equity, that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the fraudulent conduct of a third, the one who has, by his negligence or failure to do something that a prudent man under the circumstances should have done, enabled the fraud to be committed must suffer the loss occasioned thereby, applies.⁴⁶ The doctrine of subrogation cannot be extended so as to authorize the application of the principle for the relief and benefit of a person who voluntarily surrenders a right or suffers an injury, the consequence of his own willful neglect or wrong, or who has connived at, and assisted in, the wrong,⁴⁷ since one seeking subrogation must come into court with clean hands.⁴⁸ The rule that he who seeks equity must do equity applies,⁴⁹ and the pleading seeking equity must offer to do it where others have rights and must not seek to set them off.⁵⁰

b. Superior Equity Necessary

In order to entitle one to subrogation his equity should be strong and his case clear, and the remedy is not available if there are subsisting and countervailing equities.

In order to entitle one to subrogation his equity should be strong and his case clear.⁵¹ It is not

rights of others⁵⁸ or is guilty of fraud⁵⁹ or culpable negligence,⁶⁰ or where he would derive an advantage from, or establish his claim through, his own negligence⁶¹ or, in any way, would thereby reap advantage from his own wrongdoing,⁶² or from the wrongful act of one under whom he claims.⁶³ Also, subrogation will not be allowed where to do so would relieve a person from the consequences of his own wrongful or unlawful act.⁶⁴

Negligence of the subrogee must be more than ordinary negligence, however, in order to bar application of the principle of subrogation,⁶⁵ and relief may be allowed notwithstanding the suitor's mistakes and ignorance.⁶⁶ The negligence of a person seeking subrogation is chiefly of significance where there are subsequently intervening rights involved which would be prejudiced if subrogation were allowed,⁶⁷ and the mere fact that a person seeking subrogation was negligent does not bar him from relief where such negligence is as to his own interests and does not affect prejudicially the interest of the person to whose rights he seeks to be subrogated,⁶⁸ or where the negligence does not increase the burdens of any lienholder.⁶⁹ If the party invoking the rule of subrogation is not a volunteer, and both parties are negligent in the matter, there being no violation of law, contract, or superior equity, and no injury done to defendant, the application of justice and good conscience to the particular circumstances justifies the burden falling on him whose negligence or default primarily caused or induced the situation.⁷⁰ Mere constructive fraud will not prevent one from being protected by subrogation, if he has not himself actively participated in the fraud.⁷¹

Balance of interests

Subrogation is, in its essence, pure equity, and in every case the interests of all persons who might be affected by applying the doctrine must be taken into consideration, balanced against one another, and the solution arrived at which, as far as possible, is fair and just to all concerned.—In re Commercial Nat. Bank of Philadelphia, D.C.Pa., 54 F.Supp. 570.

forced to the prejudice or injury of the creditor⁷⁸ or the rights of others⁷⁹ of equal or higher rank than those of the person claiming subrogation,⁸⁰ or to displace an intervening right or title.⁸¹ So conventional subrogation by agreement with the debtor alone will not be allowed to impair the security of the creditor for the remainder of his debt⁸² or prejudice innocent third persons having equities of equal rank.⁸³

Subrogation will not be allowed where it would defeat legal rights⁸⁴ or overthrow a legal title,⁸⁵ or where it would disturb the priorities of liens,⁸⁶ or where a junior lienholder would be prejudiced.⁸⁷ Also, subrogation will not be allowed to enable one to recover money legally paid to persons, without notice, to satisfy just claims prior to the maturing of the right of subrogation;⁸⁸ and the principle of subrogation will not be applied where its effect

Extension of time for payment

Doctrine of subrogation could not be invoked to make lien of first mortgage inferior to lien of second mortgage after extension of time of payment of first mortgage debt, where second mortgagee was not prejudiced by such extension, and had not tendered amount of first mortgage to first mortgagee—Farmers & Merchants State Bank v. Hildebrandt, 267 N.W. 42, 212, 221 Wis. 394.

Position unchanged

The theory of subrogation is that junior lienor's position is left unchanged by conduct of person seeking subrogation and that junior lienor is not wronged in any respect by permitting subrogation.—Lentz v. Stoflet, 273 N.W. 763, 280 Mich. 446.

§ 7. Necessity for Obligation and Right or Privilege Aiding in Enforcement Thereof

Subrogation involves a valuable right, a person who owns the right, and a person who is seeking to be substituted in that ownership; and there must exist a claim or obligation against the debtor and some original privilege on the part of the person in whose place substitution is claimed.

Subrogation has been said to involve three elements, that is, a valuable right, a person who owns the right, and a person who is seeking to be substituted in that ownership.⁹⁰ There must exist a claim or obligation against the debtor⁹¹ and some original privilege on the part of the person in whose place substitution is claimed;⁹² if no such privilege exists, or if it has been waived by the creditor, there is nothing on which the right can be based.⁹³ The right of subrogation exists only against the principal debtor,⁹⁴ and such right does not extend against a person who is merely secondar-

(2) Claimant must establish that the person against whom he claims the right could have been compelled by the principal creditor to pay the debt paid by claimant.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. of Scranton, Pa., D.C. Md., 200 F. 443.

(3) Subrogation cannot be invoked against person who was not liable for indebtedness discharged.—Lawyers' Title & Guaranty Co. v. Claren, 260 N.Y.S. 847, 237 App.Div. 188.

Debt

In every case of subrogation there must be a debt for which a person or persons other than the subrogee are primarily liable and which in some capacity as an interested person the subrogee discharged for the protection of his own rights.—Kenney v. Kenney, 217 P.2d 151, 97 Cal. App.2d 60.

Improvements

One who made improvements on realty under good-faith belief that he was owner of the property and holder of the record title could not recover amount of such expenditures from life tenant under doctrine of subrogation, since expenditure for improvements discharged no obligation owing by life tenant.—Chapman v. Blackburn, 175 S.W.2d 26, 295 Ky. 606.

Termination of liability

Bank purchasing deficiency certificate from sheriff was not subrogated to rights of state against sheriff's surety for sheriff's collection of unlawful fees, when state refused to pay sum stipulated in deficiency certificate because of such unlawful fees, since surety's liability ceased when state recovered unlawful fees from sheriff by deducting them from payment of certificate.—Citizens' State Bank of Wheeler v. Surrender of contract

Where contractor surrendered his contract to construct house after the house was partially completed, and voluntarily agreed that nothing more was due to him, an unpaid materialman who furnished material to the contractor for use in constructing the house was not entitled to an equitable lien on theory that he was subrogated to the rights of the contractor, since there was no debt to which he could be subrogated.—Greene v. Brown, 19 S.E.2d 114, 199 S.C. 218.

No default

Where obligee, payee, or vendee is not in default or has not refused to comply with his obligation, subrogation may not be resorted to by a person paying debt of another.—Vance v. Atherton, 67 S.W.2d 968, 252 Ky. 591.

ily liable.⁹⁵ The true owner of property has no right of subrogation to the rights of tenants against one who collected rents as the agent of another whom the agent represented to be the true owner, since the tenants still owe the true owner the rent.⁹⁶

§ 8. Relationship of Subrogee to Debt Discharged

While it has been held that, in order to be entitled to subrogation, the payor must have some relationship to the debt, it is generally held that subrogation is available in favor of one, not a mere volunteer, who pays the debt of another, which in equity and good conscience should be paid by the latter. Subrogation is not available in favor of one primarily liable or one claiming under him.

Subrogation has been held to depend on the payor's relationship to the debt.⁹⁷ Accordingly, it has been held that such relationship must exist that the payment is to be regarded as by or on behalf of a person who had some interest in the premises or some claim against other persons which he is entitled in equity to have protected,⁹⁸ and that there must be a relationship of principal and surety, or of primary and secondary liability, or a situation in which one person is compelled, even though only for his own protection and without obligation to another, to pay some other person's debt.⁹⁹ Although it has been stated that the doctrine of subrogation is confined to the relation of principal and surety and guarantors, and to cases where a person, in order to protect his own junior lien, is compelled to remove one which is superior, and to cases of insurers paying losses,¹ subrogation is not confined to those personally bound on the obligation,² and it is generally held that subrogation will be applied wherever a person not acting voluntarily, but under some compulsion, pays a debt or discharges an obligation for which another is primarily liable and which in equity and good conscience ought to be discharged by the latter;³ and generally where it is equitable that a person, not a mere stranger, intermeddler, or volunteer, paying a debt should be substituted for or in the place of the creditor, such person will be so substituted.⁴

subrogated to his own rights.⁵ Subrogation is allowed only in favor of one who pays the debt of another,⁶ which debt was a valid enforceable obligation against that person,⁷ and subrogation is not allowed in favor of him who pays a debt in performance of his own obligation,⁸ since the right of subrogation never follows an actual primary liability,⁹ and there can be no right of subrogation in one whose duty it is to pay,¹⁰ or in one claiming under him¹¹ against one who is secondarily liable, or not liable at all. A person who cannot legally claim the attitude of a creditor holding the debt for the payment of which security is pledged is not entitled to subrogation to the security.¹² Where a decree of court orders that recourse for payment of the decree shall first be had against one of two defendants, but does not make the liability of the parties in the nature of that of principal and surety, the party against whom recourse was to be had last cannot, on payment of the decree, be subrogated to all the rights of the creditor against the other party.¹³

§ 9. — Volunteers

A mere volunteer paying another's debt is not entitled to subrogation; but one is not a volunteer where he pays in the performance of a legal duty, or to protect his own rights and interests, or pursuant to a contract for subrogation.

It always requires something more than the mere payment of a debt in order to entitle the person paying it to be substituted in the place of the orig-

Purchaser at invalid bulk sale to subrogation see Fraudulent Conveyances § 484 c.

The mere occurrence of insolvency is not sufficient ground to extend legal subrogation to one who has voluntarily paid another's debt.—Bankers Trust Co. v. Florida East Coast Car Ferry Co., C.C.A.Fla., 92 F.2d 450.

State having as volunteer paid indebtedness incurred by certain dissolved highway districts was not entitled to subrogation.—Tri-County Highway Improvement Dist. v. Taylor, 43 S.W.2d 231, 184 Ark. 675.

Close relative

(1) The fact that the one paying is a blood relation of the debtor does not remove him from the status of a volunteer.

Kan.—Gantz v. Bondurant, 155 P.2d 450, 159 Kan. 389.

Ky.—Kevil Bank v. Page, 126 S.W.2d 1082, 277 Ky. 657.

(2) One who without legal or moral obligation or request, consent, or ratification of debtor pays his debt cannot recover therefor from debtor, particularly where he is near relation of debtor, in which case there is rebuttable presumption that payment was gift.—Hartley v. Hartley, 179 S. E. 245, 50 Ga.App. 848.

Invalid gift

If deceased's alleged gift of money to sister was invalid, sister, in paying bills of deceased with such money, was mere volunteer.—Union Trust Co. v. Davies, 163 A. 744, 53 R.I. 63.

Claim for damages

Advancement by American bankers to purchasers of German government bonds of interest deposited in German bank to credit of bankers, but not permitted to be withdrawn, was without an assignment of the debt or an agreement for subrogation.¹⁷ A "volunteer" or "stranger" within this rule is one who has no obligation or liability to pay the debt and has no interest in the property affected by the debt.¹⁸ Some compulsion to pay,¹⁹ such as legal process,²⁰ is ordinarily essential and sufficient to support subrogation. One induced by fraud to pay another's debt is not a mere volunteer and may obtain subrogation.²¹ Subrogation arises where, under circumstances equitably entitling him to the security or obligation held by the creditor, one having a liability, or a right, or oc-

a mere gratuitous service, and did not subrogate bankers to purchasers' rights, including right to damages for withholding fund.—Doerschuck v. Mellon, 55 F.2d 741, 60 App.D.C. 383, followed in Mellon v. U. S. ex rel. Z. & F. Assets Realization Corporation, 55 F.2d 745, 60 App.D.C. 387.

Release of debt

A married woman who discharges a debt in return for payment by her debtor of a debt owed by her and a debt of her husband, on which her debtor was an indorser, is not entitled to be subrogated to security held by her debtor as indorser, in the absence of an agreement therefor.—*Troxall v. Strict and narrow construction

The term "volunteer" as a limitation on the doctrine of subrogation precluding subrogation of one who has voluntarily paid the debt of another should be narrowly and strictly interpreted to the end that the doctrine may be liberally applied.—Boney v. Central Mut. Ins. Co. of Chicago, 197 S.E. 122, 213 N.C. 563.

Payment on own initiative

One paying, on his own initiative, another's debt, without invitation, compulsion, or necessity for self-protection, is usually regarded as a mere volunteer without any standing in equity, and he cannot rely on subrogation.—Eastern States Petroleum Co. v. Universal Oil Products Co., 44 A.2d 11, 28 Del.Ch. 365.

No legal or moral obligation

One who pays debt of another without legal or moral obligation to do so is volunteer not entitled to subrogation.

Mistake as to necessity of payment. Payments made in ignorance of the real state of facts cannot be said to be voluntary.⁴⁶ So, a person who has paid a debt under a colorable obligation to do so, that he may protect his own claim, or under an honest belief that he is bound,⁴⁷ or who mistakenly but in good faith believes that he has an interest in property, to protect which he discharges a lien⁴⁸ will be subrogated to the claim he has paid. However, it has been held that a mere mistake as to the

Commonwealth's attorney, paying a lawyer out of such attorney's private funds to perform his duties during his absence in army, under mistaken belief that he had legal authority to do so and would continue to receive emoluments of office, was entitled by subrogation to recover from Commonwealth all sums to which such lawyer was entitled as pro tempore Commonwealth's attorney under appointment by circuit judge.—*Whitworth v. Good faith; not good title

Subrogation does not depend on the validity of the title of the person claiming to be reimbursed, but on his good faith and discharge of an obligation on the land to protect an interest which he believed himself to have in the property.—Tucker v. Holder, 225 S.W.2d 123, 359 Mo. 1039.

Mistake of law

Where a person, as a result of a mistake of law, supposes himself to have an interest in land, he is treated as having such an interest for purposes of subrogation and as being within the rule entitling a person to subrogation where he of necessity acts to protect his own interest.—*Schuetz v. Necessity for payment in order to entitle a surety to subrogation see infra § 48.

Surrender of property

Remote assignee of conditional sale contract covering furniture, who had notice of provision of lease to conditional seller awarding lessor lien on furniture, and who relinquished furniture to lessor foreclosing lessor's lien, could not recover from conditional seller who was secondarily liable for rent under equitable subrogation theory amount for which lessor took furniture as settlement for rent.—Spokane Sec. Finance Corporation v. Titus, 16 P.2d 1053, 170 Wash. 508.

Lien

In action on building contract wherein defendants filed a cross petition alleging that lumber company had filed lien against property for materials furnished to plaintiff, defendants were not entitled to judgment on the cross petition where they had not paid the lien.—Dusi v.

on the question, the debt must be paid in full,⁵¹ at least in so far as the rights of the principal creditor are concerned.⁵² Liability to pay⁵³ or a conditional tender of payment⁵⁴ is not sufficient. It is not necessary that payment be in money; anything accepted by the creditor is sufficient, provided it is actually accepted.⁵⁵ However, where the special circumstances of the case demand it, equity has allowed subrogation in cases where a liability only, and not payment, was shown.⁵⁶

be granted pro tanto under some circumstances,⁵⁷ the doctrine contemplates full substitution.⁵⁸ Ordinarily partial subrogation will not be allowed where the debt has not been paid in full,⁵⁹ and, until the whole debt is paid, there can be no interference with the creditor's rights or securities which might, even by bare possibility, prejudice him in the collection of the residue of his claim,⁶⁰ since a right of subrogation is against the debtor rather than against the creditor.⁶¹ Accordingly, a person who pays only one of two or more debts,⁶² or who pays only some of a series of notes,⁶³ is not subrogated to any collateral securing all of the indebtedness until the entire indebtedness has been satisfied. The reason for the rule against subrogation on part payment is that the creditor cannot equitably be compelled to split his securities and give up control of any part until he is fully satisfied.⁶⁴ It is for the benefit of the creditor,⁶⁵ and he alone can object to subrogation under a partial payment and only to the extent that it would impair his preferred rights.⁶⁶ The rule extends only as far as its reason goes,⁶⁷ and is never invoked to defeat contract obligations in the interest of the debtor alone.⁶⁸

Partial or pro tanto subrogation will be allowed where the debt has been paid in full,⁶⁹ as where the balance of the debt has been satisfied by the principal,⁷⁰ or its full satisfaction has been brought about by two persons,⁷¹ or where the person claiming subrogation offers to pay any remaining unpaid portion of the debt.⁷² Also, if by some error or mistake of calculation as to interest or costs not quite enough is paid to meet the whole debt, when the intention was to pay the whole debt, equity under its general power to relieve from mistake will grant subrogation pro tanto;⁷³ and one who endeavored but failed to ascertain the exact amount due, and then paid into court a sum in excess of the debt, interest, and costs is entitled to subrogation.⁷⁴

A judgment creditor is not bound to accept his debt from a stranger to the judgment, and a refusal of such tender is not equivalent to payment, for the purpose of subrogation, nor will it work an equitable assignment.⁷⁵ Partial subrogation will also be allowed where the creditor consents thereto or acquiesces therein.⁷⁶

The rule against partial subrogation has been held to apply to conventional, as well as to legal, subrogation,⁷⁷ unless the contract otherwise provides;⁷⁸ but it has been held that, when the right of subrogation is the result of an express agreement with the creditor, a partial payment may effect a pro tanto

subrogation of the creditor's securities,⁷⁹ provided the contract is clear.⁸⁰

Effect of payment with intent to extinguish debt. If the facts and circumstances show definitely that at the time of payment the right of subrogation was not intended to be exercised, but, on the contrary, that the purpose was not to keep the debt alive but to extinguish it, the right of subrogation cannot be held to exist.⁸¹

§ 11. When Right to Subrogation Accrues

The right to subrogation accrues on payment of the debt.

The rights of a subrogee attach at the time the equities arise in his favor,⁸² which ordinarily is at the time he pays the debt,⁸³ but the right to subrogation does not mature until the debt is paid in full.⁸⁴

§ 12. Assignability of Right

The right of subrogation may be assigned.

The right of subrogation may be assigned and enforced by the assignee.⁸⁵

§ 13. Waiver or Loss of, and Estoppel to Assert, Right

The right to subrogation may be waived or the subrogee may be estopped to assert his right thereto.

Subrogation, being an equity springing from the relation between the parties, and created and enforced for the benefit and protection of the one in whose favor it is originated, may be modified or extinguished by contract,⁸⁶ or may be waived,⁸⁷ either expressly⁸⁸ or by implication.⁸⁹ No one may complain if the person entitled to subrogation waives his right thereto,⁹⁰ except, possibly, the subrogee's creditors.⁹¹ In accordance with the rule as to waiver generally, waiver of the right of subrogation is a question of intention.⁹² It must be by the conduct of the subrogee,⁹³ and his right to subrogation will be unaffected by the conduct of another.⁹⁴

In order to establish a waiver it is necessary to show by clear evidence an intentional relinquishment of a known right.⁹⁵ It is not necessary, however, that the subrogee use the word "waive" in releasing his rights,⁹⁶ but it is sufficient if the understanding and arrangement are plainly expressed by the words used, and the rights and equities of the parties are clearly delineated.⁹⁷ Any positive act done by the subrogee, at the time of, or subsequent to, payment, inconsistent with the enforcement of the right, will be considered as a waiver.⁹⁸ Thus a conventional subrogee, who accepts other and different security than his agreement for subrogation calls for, thereby loses his right to subrogation.⁹⁹ Where one of two joint purchasers discharged the entire vendor's lien on the property, but failed to claim subrogation to the vendor's lien to support his right to contribution until after the giving of a mortgage on the property, he has been denied subrogation as against the mortgagee.¹ The right is also lost by inexcusable negligence on the part of the person asserting it;² but the equitable lien of a subrogee to the rights of a pledgee is not affected by attachment proceedings which are dissolved without any sale;³ nor it has been held, is it divested by the removal of the goods pledged or its proceeds from the jurisdiction by the pledgor's trustee in bankruptcy.⁴

Estoppel to assert right. The ordinary doctrine of estoppel applies to the subrogee's right to subrogation.⁵ Thus, the subrogee is estopped to claim subrogation where he urges another person to buy land without disclosing to him an intention to assert, in any event, some claim to it, resulting from facts or rights then existing, and without notifying him of the existence of such facts or contingent claim.⁶ However, negligence in asserting his claim does not estop one to seek subrogation unless such negligence causes injury to another or increases the burden of other lienholders.⁷

§ 14. Operation and Effect

The subrogee is ordinarily entitled to all of the creditor's rights, privileges, priorities, remedies, liens, judgments, and mortgages, subject to such limitations and conditions as were binding on the creditor; but he is not entitled to any greater rights than the creditor.

Ordinarily, subrogation, legal or conventional, passes all the creditor's rights privileges, remedies, liens, judgments, and mortgages.⁸ The subrogee is Subrogation to collateral securing other debts see supra § 10.

Nonassignable Lien

A third person who discharges a carrier's lien is not entitled to subrogation thereto, since a carrier's lien is not assignable.—Whaley Lumber Co. v. Reliance Brick Co., Tex.Civ. App., 2 S.W.2d 911.

Creditor cannot dictate terms of resulting legal subrogation to favor other inferior creditors or himself.—Decuir v. Carnes, 138 So. 103, 173 La. 563.

Sovereign rights

Subrogated rights may rise as high as, except where sovereign rights of state are involved, but no higher than, their source.—Fell v. Johnston, 36 A.2d 227, 154 Pa.Super. 470.

Statutory lien of United States

(1) The statutory lien of the United States against the assets of a bank which fails to pay a check certified by it has been held not to pass by subrogation to the one for whose debt the check was tendered on his paying the debt.—Harry Bierschenk Co. v. Goess, D.C.N.Y., 12 F.Supp. 295.

(2) However, where taxpayer paid internal revenue taxes by certified check, but before check was presented for payment bank became insolvent and taxpayer was again compelled to pay taxes, taxpayer was held subrogated to statutory right and lien of United States and, therefore, was entitled to preferred claim against assets of insolvent bank for amount of check.—Cuesta, Rey & Co. v. Newson, 136 So. 551, 102 Fla. 853.

"Subrogation" is not restricted to rights against principal debtor, but extends to all the remedies which creditor had against the principal and others liable for the debt.—Home Ins.

entitled to the same priority in the payment of the claim as the creditor would have.⁹ While assignment and subrogation have been distinguished, as discussed in Assignments § 2 b (12), it is generally held that subrogation operates as an equitable assignment,¹⁰ and an actual assignment is not necessary.¹¹ Equity treats the debt,¹² lien,¹³ or mortgage¹⁴ which has been paid and extinguished as still subsisting for the benefit of the person entitled to subrogation.

A person entitled to subrogation must work through the creditor whose rights he claims.¹⁵ He stands in the shoes of the creditor,¹⁶ and is entitled to the benefit of all the remedies of the creditor and may use all the means which the creditor could employ to enforce payment.¹⁷ However, he can en-

Partnership

Individual paying general creditors of partnership was subrogated to rights of general creditors whose claims he paid, and he had right to protect his interest in partnership property against any attempt of government to sequester partnership property for payment of income tax due from partners individually.—Adler v. Nicholas, C.C.A.Colo., 166 F.2d 674.

Personal right to priority

Where one person discharges an obligation owed by another to a third person under such circumstances that he is entitled to subrogation, and third person has a claim entitling him to preference over claims of other creditors, one discharging the obligation is entitled to a similar preference, except where right of creditor to priority was merely personal to him.—Western Casualty & Surety Co. v. Meyer, 192 S.W.2d 388, 301 Ky. 487, 164 A.L.R. 769.

Subrogation to secure contribution

In judgment creditor's action to subject to satisfaction of judgment land owned jointly by judgment debtor and his elder brother, who had paid taxes and interest on mortgage thereon, trial court properly decreed older brother's lien for taxes and interest superior to lien of plaintiff's judgment.—Fender v. Reed, 12 N.W.2d 98, 143 Neb. 911.

When right to subrogation arises, equity makes assignment and right does not then depend on, and is not affected by, willingness or unwillingness of creditor to transfer security.—Crawford State Bank v. McEwen, 272 N.W. 226, 132 Neb. 399.

An assignment is a form of subrogation, and, hence, when by virtue of subrogation one is entitled to substitution in the place of one entitled to sue, neither a written nor an oral contract is necessary to effect transfer of such right, and formal written assignment of claims adds nothing to enforceability of cause of action by assignee.—Meyers v. Exemption from statute of limitations

Where street improvement district brought foreclosure proceedings for

force only such rights as the creditor could enforce,¹⁸ and must exercise such rights under the same conditions and limitations as were binding on the creditor;¹⁹ and, hence, can be subrogated to no greater rights than the one in whose place he is substituted.²⁰ If the latter had no rights, the subrogee can have none.²¹ Where a creditor is seeking to obtain satisfaction of his claim through subrogation to the rights of his debtor against a third person, the utmost good faith on his own part will not entitle him to prevail, if it appears that his debtor has been guilty of such fraud as to defeat his rights against such third person.²²

Subrogation will not be allowed as against intervening equities acquired in reliance on a recorded release of the lien with respect to which subrogation is sought.²³ The doctrine of relation back cannot be used by the subrogee for the purpose of recovering money paid to persons having no notice, in satisfaction of just claims, prior to the maturing of the right to subrogation.²⁴ A statute protecting the title of creditors without notice against trusts implied by law or created or declared by the parties has been held to bar subrogation, as against a judgment creditor, to a lien superior to the creditor's where the creditor had no notice of the claim to subrogation at the time he acquired his lien.²⁵ On the delinquent district taxes and obtained title and agreed to surrender of such title and its lien, on execution by owners of land of notes secured by trust deed which were then sold and assigned by the district to plaintiff who furnished the money, plaintiff became subrogated to the rights and remedies of the district, including the right of the district to the exemption from statutes of limitation.—*Lueken v. other hand, it has been held that subrogation to a lien may be had as against a judgment creditor, even though the lien had been discharged at the time he filed his judgment and he had no notice of the right to subrogation, since there is no provision for recording a right to subrogation and a judgment lien is subject to outstanding equitable interests.²⁶

Subrogation gives indemnity only.²⁷ It cannot take place beyond the amount actually disbursed,²⁸ under legal necessity.²⁹ Where one who, believing himself the owner of land, satisfied a mortgage thereon and transferred the land, it has been held that his grantee's right of subrogation to the mortgage is limited to the amount he paid for the land, and that he cannot recover the full amount of the mortgage or the amount paid in discharge thereof.³⁰ Subrogation has been limited to the right of redress existing when the right to subrogation accrued, that is, when payment was made, and the subrogee is not entitled to rights subsequently accruing.³¹

As a general rule, where a person interested in an estate pays, or has his interest in the estate subjected to the payment of, a debt of the estate, he is subrogated to the claim of the creditor against the estate to the extent to which he or his interest is not primarily liable for the debt.

Ordinarily a volunteer or stranger cannot claim subrogation against an estate, and it has been held that the payment must be made by one who is personally liable for, or whose interest in the estate is chargeable with, the debt.⁴⁷ Subrogation against the estate has been allowed to a widow who contracted and paid for the erection of a monument over the grave of her deceased husband before the appointment of an administrator,⁴⁸ and to an heir who, before the estate was placed in the hands of an administrator, had incurred expenses in caring for live stock of decedent which had been given to the heir pursuant to a voluntary agreement of distribution with the other heirs.⁴⁹ Where a debt of insured

Election to take against will

(1) Where decedent's husband elected to take against decedent's will, fact that husband out of his own funds voluntarily paid a portion of two legacies did not entitle his estate to be subrogated to the rights of the legatees so as to entitle estate to have amount paid by husband charged against interest of decedent's heirs in her realty.—Beck v. Beiter, 22 A.2d 90, 146 Pa.Super. 114.

(2) Where decedent's husband elected to take against decedent's will and thereafter voluntarily paid from his own funds direct and collateral inheritance taxes, husband's estate was not entitled to have realty descending to decedent's heirs charged with amount of payment made by husband.—Beck v. Beiter, supra.

Payment held voluntary

Where realty devised by husband to widow was encumbered by a mortgage which secured a note and widow had not signed either note or mortgage, act of widow in paying note and mortgage out of her own personal fund was a voluntary one, and neither she nor her estate could be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, and the estate of the widow could not assert a claim for amount of the indebtedness against the estate of deceased husband or any of his children who eventually inherited the real estate on the widow's death.—Ratchford v. Fravel, 4 Ohio Supp. 284.

Right of recoupment

Where property set apart to surviving wife was not subject to such allotment, her right to recoup from the estate passed to her personal representatives and not to those to whom she devised the property.—Spitzer v. Branning, 190 So. 516, 139 Fla. 259.

is paid from the proceeds of a life policy pledged as collateral security for the payment of the debt, it has been held that the beneficiary of the policy is subrogated to the creditor's claim against the estate of insured,⁵⁰ but it has also been held that, where the deceased borrowed from his insurer on the security of the insurance policy, the proceeds of the policy are the primary source for the payment of the debt and the beneficiary of the policy has no claim against the estate if insurer satisfies the debt out of the proceeds of the policy.⁵¹ Persons who have given to an executor or administrator services or property which are of direct benefit to the estate are often subrogated to the right of the executor or administrator to reimbursement from the estate.⁵²

In order that the person paying the claim may be entitled to subrogation it is not necessary to show affirmatively that there was an intention to be subrogated or have the money repaid by the estate;⁵³ but, if the facts and circumstances show definitely that at the time of payment the right of subrogation was not intended to be exercised, and could not be exercised without injustice to others, no such right will be held to exist.⁵⁴

§ 16. Persons Liable for Loss or Injury Caused by Fault of Another

As a general rule, a person who, pursuant to a legal liability, has paid for a loss or injury resulting from the wrong or default of another will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor or injured person against the wrongdoer or defaulter.

As a general rule, any person who, pursuant to a legal obligation to do so, has paid, even indirectly,⁵⁵ for a loss or injury resulting from the wrong or default of another will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor or injured person against the wrongdoer or defaulter,⁵⁶ persons who stand in the shoes of the wrongdoer,⁵⁷ or others who, as to the payor, are primarily responsible for the wrong or default.⁵⁸

The right of a person doing work on estate realty at request of executor successfully defending action against him personally on ground that executor had not made himself personally liable and that the work was done solely on the credit of the estate, to be subrogated to right of executor, had he paid the charges to be indemnified out of the estate assets, was an equitable lien.—In re Crowley's Will, 4 N.Y.S.2d 885, 167 Misc. 840.

Aggravation of injury

(1) Wrongdoer who has been held liable for injuries is subrogated to any right of action which injured person may have had against physicians for malpractice.—Clark v. Halstead, 93 N.Y.S.2d 49, 276 App.Div. 17—60 C.J. p 730 note 21 [h].

(2) Where tort-feasor settled with injured person, whose injury had been aggravated by malpractice, tort-feasor's settlement covered claim for entire injury and tort-feasor was subrogated to injured person's claim for malpractice.—Noll v. Nugent, 252 N.W. 574, 214 Wis. 204—60 C.J. p 730 note 21 [h] (2).

(3) Primary tort-feasor who settled claim would have no claim for contribution against the physician who treated claimant, but he would have a claim by way of subrogation to the injured person's rights for that part of damages which was primarily due to the negligence of the physician.—Greene v. Waters, 49 N.W.2d 919, 260 Wis. 40.

Apparently this rule will not be applied to permit one who suffers loss under his contract with a third person,⁵⁹ or has his contract with a third person remain unperformed⁶⁰ because of defendant's breach of an independent contract with such third person, to be subrogated to the latter's rights against defendant. Where recovery is obtained against a master under the theory of respondeat superior for the tort or negligence of his servant, the master is subrogated to the rights of the injured person against the servant;⁶¹ and, where recovery is obtained against the owner of a motor vehicle for injury caused by its negligent operation, the owner is subrogated to the rights of the injured person against the operator of the vehicle.⁶² Similarly, where a municipality is compelled to pay compensation for an injury caused by the negligence of the owner of property abutting on a public street, it will be subrogated to the rights of the injured person against the property owner.⁶³ It has been held that one who pays pursuant to an indemnity agreement is subrogated to the creditor's rights,⁶⁴ at least where the agreement provides for subrogation,⁶⁵ but it has also been held that an indemnitor discharges his own and not another's obligation so that unless he has stipulated for it, he is not subrogated to the indemnitee's rights against the person who defaulted or caused the loss.⁶⁶

A person voluntarily satisfying the debt or default of another can claim no right of subrogation;⁶⁷ but it is apparently sufficient if there is

Judgment against operator

An automobile owner's right to be subrogated to rights of a person injured through negligence of operator of automobile is not limited to cases in which operator is not made a party defendant, but applies to any recovery under the statute, since owner's right of contribution does not rest on existence of judgment against operator in same action.—Holland v. (2) Various statutes were held to indicate that congress did not intend that, for tortious injuries to soldier in time of war, the government should be subrogated to the soldier's claim for damages.—Standard Oil Co. of Cal. v. U. S., supra.

(3) Hospital voluntarily treating injured person cannot by reason of subrogation claim any rights to proceeds of settlement or judgment paid by tort-feasor.—Richard v. National Transp. Co., 285 N.Y.S. 870, 158 Misc. 324.

(4) A city could not under doctrine of subrogation recover from motorist for hospital expenses paid by city in care and treatment of motorcycle police patrolman injured in collision with motorist.—City of New York v. Barbato, 5 N.Y.S.2d 125.

(5) Statute providing that, where a patient in any state-supported hospital has been injured by the negligence of another person and has a right of action for recovery of compensatory damages, the hospital shall be subrogated to the right of action to the extent of reasonable charges for services rendered to patient goes no further than to make any state-supported hospital the legal subrogee to the right of action of a patient treated by it against the tort-feasor to the extent of reasonable charges for services to the patient.—Peart v. Rykoski, Inc., 197 So. 605, 195 La. 931.

(6) Where statute required city to pay fireman, injured in course of his employment, his regular wages during period of his incapacity, and fireman brought action against person whose negligence had allegedly resulted in injury for recovery of damages for personal injuries, and city intervened to recover for wages paid, city was entitled to subrogation to recovery by fireman for loss of wages which city had had to pay under statute.—Potoczny, to Use of City of Philadelphia v. Vallejo, 85 A.2d 675, 170 Pa.Super. 377.

Compensation paid by government

(1) Claims of government owning vessel sunk in collision for amounts practical compulsion to pay, although there may be no strict legal obligation to do so,⁶⁸ or if, because of mistake, the payor believes that it is his legal duty to pay.⁶⁹ Where the injured person does not have a cause of action against the wrongdoer, the person making compensation for the injury has nothing to which to be subrogated.⁷⁰

Subrogation will not be accorded to a person whose own negligence or wrong has contributed to the loss or injury, where there is no primary liability or right of contribution as between him and the one against whom he seeks subrogation.⁷¹ The mere fact, however, that the person seeking subrogation has incurred liability for the loss or injury because of the violation of some duty owing to the creditor or injured person will not of itself defeat subrogation.⁷²

(2) The mere fact that volunteer firemen injured by negligence of third persons received a settlement from third persons did not establish that money so paid included any part of the payments made to them by town for injury, so as to entitle town and its indemnity insurer to recover, out of settlement, amount paid by town to firemen, on theory of equitable settlement.—*Employers' Liability Assur. Daley, 68 N.Y.S.2d 743, 271 App. Div. 662.

(3) Neither town which paid benefits under general municipal law to volunteer firemen injured while performing their duties nor its indemnity insurer was entitled on theory of equitable subrogation to recover indemnity from third persons who negligently caused injury, since benefit payments constituted compensation for work firemen did voluntarily for town.—*Employers' Liability Assur. § 17. Persons Jointly or Jointly and Severally Liable for Same Debt

It is generally held that a joint debtor who discharges more than his share of the common debt has a right to compel contribution by way of subrogation.

While there appears to be some authority to the effect that a person who pays more than his equitable share of a debt for which he and one or more others are jointly liable as principals is not entitled to be subrogated to the creditor's rights in order to compel contribution by the nonpaying debtors,⁷³ it is generally held that a joint debtor who discharges more than his share of the common debt has a right to compel contribution by way of subrogation,⁷⁴ since in equity a joint debtor is regarded as being only a surety for that portion of the debt

Right not dependent on statute or will of creditor

The right of subrogation, based on the payment by one joint debtor of the obligation of two or more of such debtors, arises independently of statute, and is not affected by the willingness or unwillingness of the original creditor to transfer the security to the debtor paying the obligation.—Hill v. Hoover, 166 S.W.2d 450, 292 Ky. 548.

A creditor cannot prevent subrogation to his rights of the joint debtor who pays the debt.—Lit Bros., to Use of Kaplan, v. Goodman, 18 A.2d 519, 144 Pa. Super. 43.

Stockholder

Statute providing that a stockholder who pays on account of his liability as such is subrogated to claim of the creditor against the corporation is not unconstitutional as impairment of obligation of contract, which should be discharged by his codebtors, and like a surety he is entitled to be subrogated,⁷⁵ although this can be only to the extent that he has paid more than his proportionate share of the debt.⁷⁶ If one joint debtor has assumed the obligation of paying the entire debt, so that inter se the assuming debtor occupies the position of principal and the other debtor or debtors the position of sureties, a nonassuming debtor will be subrogated to the extent of the amount which he actually pays;⁷⁷ but, should payment be made by the one who is ultimately obliged to discharge the debt, no right of subrogation can arise in his favor, since such payment operates as an extinguishment of the debt and a discharge of all liens held by the creditor for his security.⁷⁸

§ 18. — Joint Mortgagors and Vendees

It is generally held that, where two or more persons have mortgaged their property to secure the payment of a debt for which they are jointly liable, the person who pays more than his proportionate share of the debt will be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee to the extent necessary to reimburse him for the amount for which he was not primarily responsible.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,⁷⁹ it is generally held that, where two or more persons have mortgaged their property to secure the payment of a debt for which they are jointly liable and one mortgagor is compelled to pay more than his proportionate share of the debt, he will be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, or be given a lien on the interest of the other or others, to the extent necessary to reimburse him for the amount for which he was not primarily responsible,⁸⁰ even as against one to whom a comortgagor has transferred his interest before the mortgage has been satisfied where such a person has taken subject to the rights of the mortgagee and has in no way been prejudiced or misled by an apparent satisfaction of the mortgage.⁸¹ Where the land has been sold on foreclosure, and the personal liability of the mortgagors extinguished and satisfied, a mortgagor who redeems from the sale can claim by way of subrogation only a lien on the interest of his comortgagor, and no personal liability on the part of the latter can be asserted, since no such right remains in the mortgagee to which subrogation can be had.⁸² Where land is sold or conveyed to two or more persons jointly subject to a lien of the grantor or vendor to secure payment of the unpaid purchase price, or other consideration to be paid or furnished, a grantee or taking property without due process or as an ex post facto law. Under the statute the stockholder succeeds to the rights of the creditor against the corporation to the extent of the amount paid by the stockholder and the stockholder to the extent of such amount is substituted for the creditor. A stockholder who pays creditor's claim does not stand in the position of a surety, since the liability of stockholders is entirely independent of that of the corporation and they are in no sense sureties for the corporation.—McCune v. First Nat. Trust & Savings Bank of Santa Barbara, C.C.A.Cal., 109 F.2d 887.

Prejudice to third persons

Where father and son execute their joint note to a creditor of the son, and without knowledge of the creditor it is agreed between the makers that the father shall pay the note to satisfy a debt he owes the son, the son whose property is taken in payment by an execution issued under a judgment on the note is not entitled to be subrogated to the payee's rights as against subsequent lien creditors of the father.—Foy v. Pulling, 63 Pa.Super. 552.

Husband and wife; statutory subrogation

Primary purpose of statute requiring that property of husband be applied first to satisfy joint liability of husband and wife, and that wife paying debt for her husband is subrogated to rights of creditors whose claims she has satisfied, as against her husband, is to aid creditors who furnish goods and services to a family.—*Larzo v. Property primarily liable

Where husband and wife as joint obligors executed note to pay for realty purchased as home, although title to it was placed in wife and trust deed on realty was executed by both to secure note, executor of estate of deceased husband would not be entitled to be subrogated to rights of holder of note if he should pay one half of note, where it was not established that husband and wife intended that realty lien should be primary source from which note should be paid.—*Commerce Union Bank v. vendee who pays more than his share of the purchase price will be subrogated to the vendor's or grantor's lien as against the other grantee or vendee,⁸³ or persons who purchase from the latter with notice;⁸⁴ but it has been held that the paying purchaser will not be subrogated to an express vendor's lien as against one who purchases the interest of the nonpaying purchaser, in reliance on information from the vendor that the debt has been paid and the lien discharged, and without notice of the latent equity in favor of the payor, even though the lien has not been released of record.⁸⁵

§ 19. — Joint Judgment Debtors

The majority view is that a joint judgment debtor who pays the judgment is entitled to subrogation to the extent that he has exonerated his codebtor.

It has been held that a joint judgment debtor who has paid the entire judgment cannot, in order to compel contribution, enforce the creditor's rights against the codebtor either by way of subrogation or assignment;⁸⁶ but the majority rule appears to be that, if there is an apparent intention on the part of the paying debtor not to discharge the judgment completely, he will be subrogated to the creditor's rights to the extent of the amount paid in exoneration of the codebtor,⁸⁷ and a right of subrogation is sometimes provided by statute.⁸⁸ It has also been held that, where one joint judgment debtor gives a recognizance to obtain a stay as against him, the codebtors, on paying the debt after a breach of the recognizance, will not be subrogated to the creditor's rights against the surety on the recognizance, since there is no privity of contract between the parties and the surety's liability, which is not primary with respect to the codebtors.⁸⁹

§ 20. — Partners

As a general rule, a partner who pays a firm debt is not entitled to subrogation if there has not been a settlement of partnership accounts or a promise establishing his right to have the copartner contribute toward or pay the debt.

As a general rule, a partner who has paid a firm debt with his individual means cannot compel contribution from his copartner by way of subrogation to the rights of the creditor whose debt has been paid.⁹⁰ Accordingly, a partner who pays a firm debt is not entitled to subrogation if there has not been a settlement of partnership accounts or a promise establishing his right to have the copartner contribute toward or pay the debt;⁹¹ but, where the right to contribution has accrued as by a dissolution and settlement of accounts,⁹² or the nonpaying partner is primarily liable, inter se, because he has expressly assumed the obligation of paying a firm debt or debts,⁹³ or because the debt is in reality his own rather than that of the firm,⁹⁴ subrogation is generally allowed. If, in a suit for settlement of partnership accounts, one partner pays to another the amount which it is the obligation of a third partner to contribute, the paying partner will be subrogated to such rights as the payee partner has acquired against the third.⁹⁵ If partners borrow money on their personal responsibility, in order to discharge a debt which is a lien on their property, one partner, on being compelled to repay the loan, cannot be subrogated to the lien which was extinguished with the borrowed money.⁹⁶

A cotenant who pays off an encumbrance or lien which is a charge on the common estate will ordinarily be subrogated to the creditor's rights to the extent necessary to compel contribution.

As a general rule, unless there are intervening equities,⁹⁷ a cotenant who pays off or discharges an encumbrance or lien which is a charge on the common estate will be subrogated to the creditor's rights against the interests of his cotenants to the extent necessary to compel contribution.⁹⁸ No subrogation will be allowed where the circumstances show that a tenant in common in paying off a mortgage on the common estate intended a benefaction to the other tenants, and not to be subrogated to any claims against them or their estate.⁹⁹ Subrogation apparently cannot be claimed to a nonassignable right of reentry for condition broken.¹

As a general rule, where a bill or note has been paid by a party who is only secondarily liable, such as, an indorser in the course of negotiation or transfer,² an accommodation indorser,³ an accommodation acceptor,⁴ or a drawer,⁵ the paying party will be subrogated to all rights and remedies which were available to the holder or owner of the instrument in order to obtain payment thereof from prior parties,⁶ or other parties who, with respect to the

Where an heir discharges a valid encumbrance against property jointly owned, he is subrogated to the rights of the creditor and would normally be entitled to interest paid, but, where such heir has by contract or by his actions relinquished certain of his rights, he is not entitled to full subrogation and contribution from other heirs.—Back v. paying party, are primarily liable on the instrument.⁷ A party primarily liable on a note is not entitled to subrogation.⁸ A party secondarily liable with respect to the maker, but primarily liable with respect to another party to the instrument, will not be subrogated with respect to collateral which has been given the creditor by the latter party.⁹ One not liable on the note, as one who assigned it without recourse, is not entitled to subrogation where he pays it without a demand on him by the holder.¹⁰

Necessity and sufficiency of payment. Generally a party secondarily liable on a bill or note must actually pay the instrument before he can avail himself of, and be subrogated to, the rights and securities of the creditor or holder.¹¹ It is not necessary that the payment should be made in money since the giving of anything which the creditor is willing to accept in satisfaction of the debt is sufficient.¹² Although by statute the indorser of a note is not liable thereon until the holder has exhausted his remedies against the maker, if the indorser waives that privilege and pays the amount due, he becomes subrogated to the rights of the holder, since such a payment cannot be considered as a voluntary one.¹³

Where the rule exists that the holder of a mortgage given to secure a debt falling due in installments may maintain successive actions of foreclosure as the installments fall due, it has been held that an indorser who pays an installment of interest may by way of subrogation maintain an immediate action to foreclose a mortgage given to secure payment of principal and interest subject, however, to the holder's rights in the security for the principal debt and remaining installments of interest.¹⁴

Makers and accommodation makers. Since an accommodating party is usually regarded as being only a surety for the party accommodated, it is the generally accepted rule that an accommodation maker, who has been compelled to pay a holder or transferee of the instrument, will be subrogated to all rights and securities possessed by the latter in order to obtain payment from the party accommodated.¹⁵ Until the note is paid, the accommodation maker is not entitled to subrogation.¹⁶ One of two accommodation makers who pays the entire note will be subrogated to the rights of his comaker under a trust agreement that certain collateral given the creditor should be applied in satisfaction of the note.¹⁷

Ordinarily a maker for value will not be subrogated to the holder's rights against a party only secondarily liable.¹⁸ A maker for value, who has paid the amount of a note to the payee but is compelled to pay the note again because it was in the hands of a transferee, will not be subrogated to the latter's rights against the payee and indorser;¹⁹ and, since an exchange of notes is a sufficient con-

In Tennessee

(1) An accommodation maker being primarily liable on the note is not entitled to subrogation to the note where he pays it.—Merchants' Bank & Trust Co. v. Bushnell, 218 S.W. 709, 142 Tenn. 275—Lovelace-Farmer Co. v. Shaw, 4 Tenn.App. 458.

(2) However, there is also authority holding that an accommodation maker whose name appeared on note as comaker was a surety and, on payment of note by accommodation maker because of principal maker's default, accommodation maker, to whom note was indorsed, could maintain action thereon against principal maker.—Hunt v. Hoppe, 124 S.W.2d 306, 22 Tenn.App. 540.

sideration so that neither instrument is accommodation paper, one maker, in such a case, on being compelled to pay the note which he has executed, will not be subrogated to the holder's rights in securities which have been given by the maker of the other note on his indorsement of the note involved,²⁰ or to rights of the other maker, or payee, against other persons who have undertaken with him to pay the debt which was paid by means of the note involved.²¹ Where, however, a note obtained by fraud has been transferred to a holder for value so that the maker can no longer avail himself of his defense against the payee, the maker may be subrogated to, and acquire the rights of, the payee with respect to the transaction;²² and, where there has been a failure of consideration, so that the maker would not be liable to the payee, but the payee has transferred the notes to a third person in payment of land, and the maker is compelled to pay the assignee, the maker in such a case occupies a position similar to that of a surety for the purchase price, and will be subrogated to a lien reserved by the vendor.²³ It has been held that the fact that the maker has a defense to liability on a note does not make his payment thereof voluntary so as to deprive him of the right of subrogation.²⁴

To what party is subrogated, and limitations on right. After a party secondarily liable has paid the debt, he has, by way of subrogation, the same rights on the instrument itself as the holder would have had against the parties primarily liable,²⁵ including the holder's rights in any collateral security which has been given him for the debt by a party who is primarily liable.²⁶ Also, either with,²⁷ or without,²⁸ statutory authority therefor, he is entitled to the protection of judgments which the holder has obtained against parties who are primarily liable,²⁹ or security which has been given to assure payment of the instrument.³⁰

A party secondarily liable will not be subrogated to the rights of the holder of an instrument other than the particular instrument on which the party is bound, although the instrument on which the party is bound, and compelled to pay, has been used to pay and satisfy the other instrument under which the rights, to which he claims to be subrogated, existed.³¹

An indorser, who has been compelled to pay a note, will be subrogated to the maker's rights against the payee where the maker has subsequently paid the note again in ignorance of the prior payment by the indorser.³² If the indorser of a bill is compelled to pay it because of the drawee's refusal to accept and pay it at maturity, the indorser will be subrogated to the drawee's rights in goods given him by the drawer to secure the latter's obligation to furnish the drawee funds with which to take up the bill.³³ Where the maker has deposited sufficient funds with the holder to take the note up at maturity, an indorser by paying the note before maturity, and accepting the holder's direct obligation to hold the funds for the indorser's benefit, thereby waives his right to be subrogated to any rights the maker might have against the holder.³⁴

§ 24. — Subrogation of Holder

Where both the indorser and the maker of a note are insolvent, the holder will be subrogated to the indorser's rights in security given him by the maker to indemnify him against his liability as indorser.

Where both the indorser and maker of a note are insolvent, the holder will be subrogated to the indorser's rights in security given by the maker to indemnify him against his liability as indorser;³⁵ and the holder of a bill of exchange, on the failure of an accommodation acceptor to pay it, may resort to securities which the drawer has given to the acceptor to secure the latter for the amount of the accepted bill.³⁶ A holder will not, however, be subrogated to security which joint indorsers have given to each other simply to secure performance of their obligation to contribute as to each other, rather than to secure payment of the principal debt itself.³⁷

Where two persons have exchanged notes, the holder of one note is not entitled to be subrogated to its maker's rights in securities which he has been given by the maker of the other note to secure payment of such note, since the transactions are independent;³⁸ but, where a forged note is given in partial payment of a genuine note, which is secured, a bank rediscounting the forged note, whose payments are applied toward satisfaction of the debt represented by the genuine note, is by way of subrogation entitled to an equitable trust in the proceeds of the security given for the genuine note.³⁹ Where the drawee of a draft or check applies the fund on which it is drawn in satisfaction of another debt of the drawer secured by collateral, it has been held that the payee will not be subrogated to the collateral, since he bears no relation to the debt which the collateral secures;⁴⁰ but other cases by an application of the two funds doctrine have permitted the payee to be subrogated to the collateral of the drawee.⁴¹

§ 25. Persons Acting in Representative, Fiduciary, or Official Capacity

One who, acting in a representative or fiduciary capacity, satisfies obligations to the benefit of his principal, is subrogated to the rights of the principal against others primarily liable, and to the rights of the creditor against the principal.

One who, acting in a representative or fiduciary capacity, incurs and satisfies obligations to the benefit of his principal, is subrogated to the rights of the principal against others primarily liable,⁴² and to the rights of the creditor against the principal.⁴³ One who has an active interest or concern in the nature of a definite managerial responsibility with respect to the payment of enforceable demands against an estate, and who, although under no legal or moral obligation personally to pay, nevertheless does so, is entitled to subrogation, provided no option or privilege of the person primarily liable is thereby intercepted, abridged, or altered.⁴⁴ A fiduciary who satisfied a judgment against him for breach of his duty with respect to the obligation of a third person has been subrogated to his beneficiary's rights with respect to such obligation.⁴⁵

Where assignees of an insolvent debtor give their joint note to a creditor of the insolvent in payment of the creditor's debt, relying for the means of paying the note on the funds in their hands by virtue of the assignment, specially appropriated for that purpose, the assignees will be considered, both in law and equity, as substituted for the creditor with respect to such fund.⁴⁶ An attorney, compelled by his neglect to pay his client the amount of a judg-

§ 26. — Agent

Where an agent pays on behalf of his principal, the agent is subrogated to any rights his principal may have to reimbursement from third persons.

Where an agent pays on behalf of his principal, the agent is subrogated to any rights his principal may have to reimbursement from third persons.⁵¹ Accordingly, an agent who in good faith pays a mortgage of his principal is subrogated to the mortgagee's rights.⁵² An agent who is compelled by his mistake or mismanagement of his principal's affairs to pay his principal for a debt or default primarily due by a third person is subrogated to the rights of the principal against that person,⁵³ unless the agent was not merely negligent but his conduct was such that he is not entitled to the consideration of a court of equity,⁵⁴ or the agent's use of his own funds for the protection of his principal was voluntary.⁵⁵ A general agent, on being compelled to pay a debt which should be satisfied by a subagent, is subrogated to the creditor's right against the latter.⁵⁶ An insurance agent who in the ordinary course of business pays premiums to the insurer on behalf of the insured is subrogated to the insurer's rights against the insured with respect to the premium.⁵⁷

As a general rule, an executor or administrator who with his own funds pays debts or charges on the estate is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of those paid.

While there is some authority that an executor or administrator who uses his own funds to pay the debt of the estate is a mere volunteer and not entitled to subrogation,⁵⁸ as a general rule, unless there is fraud or want of good faith on the part of the executor or administrator,⁵⁹ an executor or administrator who with his own funds pays debts or charges on the estate is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of those paid for the collection of the amounts so paid,⁶⁰ and he may apply assets in his possession to his reimbursement,⁶¹ or may be entitled to have decedent's land sold, and to be repaid out of the proceeds of the sale.⁶² Moreover, in so far as an administrator has paid a debt of the estate with assets he must refund, he may be subrogated to the rights of the person whose funds were used against the creditor paid,⁶³ or to the rights of the creditor paid,⁶⁴ and may resort to any remedy such creditor would have against the assets of the estate.⁶⁵

Where an administrator pays debts in full, with entire confidence that the assets are sufficient for all purposes, and the estate subsequently is found to be insolvent, he will be entitled to subrogation as to other claims against the estate in favor of the same creditors, to the extent of overpayment on the first claim,⁶⁶ even after audit,⁶⁷ and an administrator who pays debts not of the preferred class before he has had time to ascertain the condition of the estate may be subrogated to the shares of the creditors whose claims he has paid, where the estate is in fact insolvent.⁶⁸ Likewise, where the administrator pays a debt due the estate, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the estate against the debtor.⁶⁹ Where a distributee is entitled to recover his share either from the personal representative or from a third person who has received it and recovers it by action against the personal representative, the latter is subrogated to the distributee's rights against such third person.⁷⁰ Where an executor makes disbursements from his own funds for the benefit of legatees or distributees, it has been held that he becomes subrogated to their rights against the estate.⁷¹

Where an executor is secondarily liable for losses by a life tenant he has a right of subrogation against such life tenant,⁷² and this right is not affected by the fact that the deceased life tenant devised real estate to the remaindermen constituting the creditors,⁷³ or by the rule that the legatee or distributee may not be compelled to refund a payment made under a mistake of law.⁷⁴ An executor or administrator who pays a claim against the estate which is disallowed on his accounting is subrogated to the claim,⁷⁵ but it has been held that an executor or administrator who pays claims not sworn to as required by statute is not subrogated to the claimant's rights.⁷⁶ An administrator surcharged with a deposit made in an insolvent bank has been subrogated to the rights of the estate against the bank,⁷⁷ and an executor who pays a surcharge equal to the value of the securities for his negligence in failing to sell them has been subrogated to the rights of the estate with respect to the securities.⁷⁸ One who pays legacies with the reasonable expectation of becoming the executor of an estate has been subrogated to the rights of the legatees against the estate⁷⁹ where he dies before becoming executor.⁸⁰

Discharge of encumbrance. An administrator or executor who discharges an encumbrance on estate property with his personal funds is subrogated thereto.⁸¹ So, where administrators discharge a deed of trust on land belonging to the estate, they are entitled to subrogation.⁸² The rule which prevents subrogation where one of several principals pays a joint judgment, or more than his share, does not apply where executors of two deceased tenants in common, having sold the property, discharge joint encumbrances thereon.⁸³ Where an encumbrance on estate property is discharged with the funds or property of the estate subrogation does not take place.⁸⁴ Where the decedent had given a mortgage and then transferred the property to one who assumed the mortgage, on payment of the mortgage by the executor, the estate becomes subrogated to the mortgage and to the rights against the one who assumed it.⁸⁵

Subrogation against coexecutor. Where one representative is compelled to make good a loss resulting from the default of his corepresentative, he is entitled to be subrogated to all rights which the estate⁸⁶ and the persons beneficially interested therein⁸⁷ have against the corepresentative because of his misconduct; but subrogation to the rights of an executor as legatee has been refused where the interest of the legatee has passed to an innocent third person by foreclosure of a mortgage executed by the legatee.⁸⁸ A coexecutor, sued on his bond for the default of his coexecutor, is entitled to subrogation,⁸⁹ and an executor, liable on joint bond for the default of his coexecutor, is entitled to be subrogated to whatever compensation the coexecutor is entitled to.⁹⁰

§ 28. — Guardian

A guardian who incurs and satisfies obligations for the benefit of his ward is subrogated to the rights of the ward against others primarily liable.

The general rule that one who, acting in a representative or fiduciary capacity, incurs and satisfies obligations to the benefit of his principal is subrogated to the rights of the principal against others primarily liable applies to a guardian.⁹¹ Thus, where he pays a creditor of his ward, he will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor as against the estate.⁹² A guardian who extends time to his ward's debtor until he becomes insolvent, relying on his promise to pay, and settles the debt in his accounts, can recover it as a debt due to himself;⁹³ and, similarly, a guardian compelled by suit to pay his ward a sum of money because of his neglect to sue a former guardian, by whom the sum was due the ward and unaccounted for, is subrogated to the rights of the ward, and may recover the amount from the former guardian⁹⁴ or from the sureties on his bond.⁹⁵ Where a guardian pays to his ward the amount secured to the ward by a recognizance given by another, he is entitled to be subrogated on the security.⁹⁶ So a guardian, having lent money belonging to the ward on a note and mort-

Where ward is not entitled to recover on claim, the guardian, on paying the ward the claim and being subrogated thereto, cannot recover.—First Nat. Bank of Greenville v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 35 S.E.2d 47, 207 S.C. 15, 162 A.L.R. 1003.

gage running to the guardian as such and having paid the loan in accounting for his guardianship is entitled to the note and mortgage,⁹⁷ and, where he has lent the ward's money without an order of the court and has paid it back from his own funds, he is subrogated to the rights of the ward.⁹⁸

Where a guardian has been compelled to account to his ward for a deposit in an insolvent bank, the guardian is subrogated to the ward's rights in the account;⁹⁹ but, where the guardian has wrongfully invested funds belonging to his ward and has been compelled to account for such funds, subrogation has been denied.¹ A guardian who advances the balance found on settlement of his account is entitled to subrogation to the remedies of his late ward as against his agent who had wrongfully retained possession of the assets represented by the decree.² An unauthorized purchase of land for wards, made by a guardian out of his own funds, entitles him to subrogation to the rights of the wards.³ A guardian who has for a valuable consideration promised to pay to the ward the amount of the ward's interest in land is not, on payment thereof, subrogated to the interest of the ward in the land.⁴

Discharge of encumbrance. Where a guardian pays a purchase-money lien, for which the land of the ward is liable, out of his own money⁵ or from money borrowed for such purpose, for which he is liable,⁶ he is entitled to subrogation to the rights of the creditor paid. Further, a guardian who, out of his own funds, pays a note of the ward which is secured by a chattel mortgage in order to prevent a loss of the property is subrogated to the rights of the chattel mortgagee.⁷

§ 29. — Sheriff or Other Public Officer

General rules as to subrogation have been applied where a sheriff or other public officer satisfies another's debt.

Where a sheriff, without liability to do so and without the consent of the debtor, satisfies an execution on which a return "no property found" has been returned, he has no right of subrogation;⁸ but, where he has satisfied the execution because of a liability to do so, he will be subrogated to the creditor's rights.⁹ So a sheriff¹⁰ or constable¹¹ who has been made liable for the failure of the obligors in a forthcoming bond to produce the property is subrogated to the creditor's rights on such bond, and, where the sheriff, by reason of the insolvency of the receptors of attached property, has been compelled to discharge an attachment debt, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the debtor.¹² Under some statutes, where a sheriff fails to retain any execution directed to him and where, after judgment is had against him, he pays the amount of the execution, with interest and costs, such judgment and execution vest in him.¹³

A sheriff who has satisfied a judgment rendered against him because of his deputy's failure to pay money collected on an execution is entitled to be subrogated to the deputy's rights.¹⁴ On satisfying a judgment based on his own delinquency, a deputy sheriff cannot thereupon recover the amount from the person for whose benefit the judgment was recovered.¹⁵ Where by reason of his neglect to collect and return an execution in due time, a constable is subject to a statutory liability, and voluntarily pays the judgment without taking a transfer thereof, he is not entitled to subrogation.¹⁶ A constable holding an attachment against the purchaser may

Where a public officer, having deposited public funds in a depository, is compelled to refund such funds on refusal of the depository to do so, such officer is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the body to which the refund was made.¹⁸ However, where a deputy collector of internal revenue deposits money belonging to his department in a bank which becomes bankrupt, and the collector of internal revenue pays the money to the government, in view of the fact that the collector is the only person known to the law as the custodian of the revenue collected until it is paid into the proper depository, subrogation has been refused.¹⁹ A claim of subrogation has also been denied where a deposit by a public officer in a bank was unlawful²⁰ under the rule that subrogation will not be allowed to relieve a person from the consequences of his own unlawful act.²¹ A public officer who, at the request of the debtor, discharges a lien securing an obligation due the officer is not a mere volunteer in doing so,²² and is entitled to be subrogated to the lien.²³ Where a school treasurer paid legitimate orders drawn on him as treasurer, he was entitled, on the principle of subrogation, to reimburse himself from school funds coming into his hands.²⁴ A public official, on taking over an insolvent bank and paying the depositors, is subrogated to their rights against the stockholders.²⁵ A school trustee who incurs unauthorized debts for the completion of a school building and who pays such debts out of school funds will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor paid where the debts have been ratified by the school corporation; but, where the creditors have no right of action because of failure to comply with statutory requirements in making the contract, there can be no subrogation.²⁶

§ 30. — Trustee

General rules as to subrogation have been applied with respect to the right of a trustee to subrogation.

General rules with respect to subrogation have been applied as to the right of a trustee to subrogation.²⁷ Where a trustee is compelled to pay an obligation due the estate, by reason of his neglect timely to collect such assets, title thereto vests in the trustee.²⁸ Moreover, trustees who discharge debts of the estate in reliance on void security are entitled to subrogation.²⁹ Where there is a mixed sale of property under a decree for the payment of debts, and where the trustees making the sale have exceeded in their payments their cash receipts, they may be subrogated, as to the excess, to the rights of the creditors paid off.³⁰ The right of subrogation does not exist in behalf of a trust fund wrongfully lent by the trustee;³¹ nor will such trustee be entitled to subrogation, where he has paid the cestui que trust, because of any application of the borrowed funds by the borrower.³² A trustee ex maleficio is not entitled to be subrogated to se-

§ 31. Persons Discharging Encumbrances

Where one having an interest in property pays off an encumbrance on the property in order to protect his interest, he is ordinarily entitled to be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the person paid.

The general rules as to the right to subrogation

apply with respect to the right of a person discharging an encumbrance on property to be subrogated thereto.³⁵ Thus, where one having an interest in property pays off an encumbrance on the property in order to protect his interest, he is ordinarily entitled to be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the person paid,³⁶ provided the debt secured by the encumbrance is not one for which the payor is primarily liable,³⁷ and the grant of such relief is equitable.³⁸ The discharge of an encumbrance by a mere volunteer will not entitle him to subrogation,³⁹ but subrogation will be allowed where the encumbrance is discharged pursuant to an express or implied agreement for subrogation.⁴⁰ The fact

Belief of ownership

One who at the time of paying the mortgage debt erroneously believes himself the owner of the property, while in fact the record shows him entitled to but a life estate, is nevertheless entitled to subrogation against the remainderman to the extent to which such remainderman was bound to pay the mortgage to protect his estate.—*Stroh v. Where a wife made all the payments due on a contract to purchase land entered into by husband, not as a volunteer but in protection of her dower interests and the homestead interest of herself and minor son, her equity in the property was superior to that of a simple contract creditor of husband.—Des Portes v. Discharge by person entitled to redeem

Subrogation arises by operation of law whenever a mortgage debt is extinguished by one entitled to redeem, other than the mortgagor or person ultimately liable for mortgage debt. Subrogation necessary for protection of rights

An equitable assignment of lien and debt to person paying mortgage arises when person making payment stands in such relationship to the premises or to the other parties that his interests, recognized either by law or equity, can only be fully protected and maintained by regarding the transaction as an assignment to him, and the lien of the mortgage as being kept alive, either wholly or in part, for his security and benefit.—Lusk v. Parmer, Tex.Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 677, error dismissed.

Where one was induced by fraud to convey property and the fraudulent grantee mortgaged the property and then reconveyed it to the original owner, who, without knowledge of such mortgage, discharged an earlier mortgage on the property, the owner was entitled to subrogation to the mortgage he discharged as against the mortgage given by his grantee.—Simpson v. Del Hoyo, 94 N.Y. 189.

Condemnation

(1) In proceeding for condemnation of fee title, wherein owners were entitled to only nominal award because their title was subject to street easements, but mortgagees were entitled to unincumbered fee value, city would be subrogated to mortgagees' rights in portion of mortgaged premises which was not taken, to extent of award paid to mortgagees, although subordinated to mortgagees' rights in such portion for the balances due on mortgages.—In re Braddock Avenue, City of New York, 15 N.E.2d 563, 278 N.Y. 163, reargument denied In re Braddock Avenue, City of New York, 16 N.E.2d 850, 278 N.Y. 703—In re Sixty-Eighth (Tenth and Eleventh) Street, 13 N.Y.S.2d 714, 257 App.Div. 289, supplemented 41 N.Y.S.2d 211, 266 App.Div. 677.

(2) Where assignee of mortgage, for nominal consideration, released certain lots from mortgage after title to part of mortgaged land had vested in city by virtue of condemnation proceedings, the city could not successfully claim that its right of subrogation by way of an equitable lien on mortgaged property not taken, on payment of award to assignee, was impaired by assignee's acts, since subrogation should not have been applied.—In re 43d Avenue, Borough of Queens, City of New York, 34 N.E.2d 841, 282 N.Y. 42, reargument denied 12 N.Y.S.2d 356, 256 App.Div. 1100.

(3) In proceeding to condemn land for grade crossing elimination, where owner agreed to convey property to state for a payment of a cash consideration and relocation and grading of entranceway, but state was required to pay mortgagee an award of fee value of land taken to be applied on mortgage, state was entitled to be subrogated to mortgagee's rights in trust,⁵⁸ a vendor's lien,⁵⁹ a judgment lien,⁶⁰ an execution lien,⁶¹ a materialman's or mechanic's lien,⁶² or an assessment.⁶³

Maritime lien. One who pays the wages of seamen may be subrogated to the rank of the seamen as against other lienholders,⁶⁴ and this rule extends to an owner⁶⁵ or coowner⁶⁶ when the equities are with him, and a bottomry creditor may, by payment of the wages, entitle himself to a novation in their place for recovery of their demands against the vessel.⁶⁷ However, a mere volunteer who discharges the lien for wages cannot legally claim to be subrogated thereto;⁶⁸ nor is a general agent entitled to subrogation by reason of paying seamen in the usual course of his agency.⁶⁹ A third person who, at the request of the master, discharges maritime liens is not a volunteer.⁷⁰ The charterer of a vessel or his agent, who has authority to, and does, order services and supplies for the vessel is subrogated to a maritime lien where he pays for such supplies and services.⁷¹ Where a vessel is forfeited for false registry, a person who has paid on behalf of the vessel the statutory head tax due on alien passengers, which is a lien on the vessel, is entitled to be subrogated thereto.⁷²

§ 32. — Persons in Status of Purchaser of Encumbered Property in General

A purchaser of property on which there is an encumbrance is not a volunteer in discharging the encumbrance, and, where he is not primarily obligated to pay the encumbrance, and justice and equity require it, he may be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the encumbrance.

A purchaser of property on which there is an encumbrance is not a volunteer in paying and discharging the encumbrance where the payment is made to protect his own interest or to perfect his own title,⁷³ and, where he is not primarily obligated to pay the encumbrance, and justice and equity require it, he may be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the encumbrance,⁷⁴ at least as against a junior encumbrance.⁷⁵ In order that the purchaser may be entitled to subrogation, it is essential that he has, by his payments, extinguished the encumbrance or charge on the property purchased,⁷⁶ and that his payments, made in good faith,⁷⁷ were made either as the result of compulsion,⁷⁸ or for the protection of some interest in the property that was threatened or imperiled by the encumbrance or charge paid.⁷⁹ It has been stated that a purchaser of property who discharges an encumbrance thereon at the request of the debtor will be subrogated to such encumbrance as against other encumbrances of which he had no notice, but not as against encumbrances of which he had notice either actual or constructive.⁸⁰

A purchaser of realty who discharges an encumbrance for which he is primarily liable is not entitled to claim subrogation.⁸¹ Thus, as a general rule, a purchaser of encumbered property cannot be subrogated to the benefit of an encumbrance which he has assumed and agreed to pay,⁸² as against junior encumbrances.⁸³

Failure of title. A purchaser who, in good faith, in order to protect his title or interest, discharges an encumbrance on the property but has no title or interest, is not a mere volunteer,⁸⁴ and is entitled to subrogation,⁸⁵ and to have the lien of the encumbrance kept alive until he is paid.⁸⁶ This rule has been held to apply in favor of a purchaser who assumed an encumbrance as against third persons who have a hostile and superior interest in the property.⁸⁷ It has been held that a purchaser, who with notice of a prior accepted option to purchase the property, applies the purchase money to discharge encumbrances thereon, is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the encumbrancers paid on being compelled to perform the option.⁸⁸ Where one, knowing that the mortgage was not executed by the owner of the property, nevertheless releases a chattel mortgage of it, he has been denied subrogation to a valid mortgage which was released as part of the transaction involved in the giving of the chattel mortgage.⁸⁹

a. Mortgage or Deed of Trust

As a general rule, a purchaser who discharges a mortgage or deed of trust on the property may be subrogated to the rights of the holder thereof, but subrogation will ordinarily be denied a purchaser who assumed the mortgage or deed of trust; subrogation will ordinarily be allowed to a purchaser whose title has wholly failed.

As a general rule, a purchaser of property encumbered by a mortgage or deed of trust who, in order to protect his title or interest, believing in good faith he has title or interest, although his title or interest has wholly failed, discharges the

(1) A purchaser of land encumbered by a mortgage, making part payment to the mortgagee of the debt secured by the mortgage, is entitled to be subrogated pro tanto as to subsequent encumbrances.—Fuller v. Irvin, 42 P. 1094, 1 Kan.App. 248—60 C.J. p 792 note 77.

(2) One who purchased property subject to two mortgages is not entitled to subrogation as against the second to the extent of the payments he made on the first mortgage, and is not entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of a sale on the foreclosure of the second mortgage to the extent that he has paid the second mortgage.—Schreyer v. Saunders, 56 N.Y.S. 921, 39 App.Div. 8.

(3) Partial subrogation generally see supra § 10.

Partial assumption

Where father who owned two ranches encumbered by one mortgage conveyed one ranch to his three sons in consideration of their assumption of only one half of entire indebtedness, the sons who discharged more than their share of a common debt in order to protect their ranch were entitled to be subrogated to rights of the lienholders to the extent that their payment exceeded their assumed share.—Hurt v. Read, C.C.A.Tex., 108 F.2d 282.

An assignee of the mortgagor, on being compelled for the protection of his interest to pay the mortgage, is not a volunteer.—Tarbell v. Durant, 17 A. 44, 61 Vt. 516.

(1) The text rule has been applied in favor of a mortgagee who takes a deed instead of foreclosing and he is subrogated to his mortgage as against junior liens of which he had no knowledge.—Perry v. Perry, 221 N. W. 674, 53 S.D. 585.

(2) On the other hand, a purchaser from the mortgagee, to whom the mortgagor had quitclaimed the property has been denied subrogation to the mortgage as against junior liens.—Novak v. Kruse, 123 N.E. 519, 288 Ill. 363.

(3) A mortgagee who in purchasing property releases his mortgage in part payment, relying on a promise that a prior mortgage would be released, cannot be subrogated to the rights he would have had under the canceled mortgage where the release of the prior mortgage was forged, and the same rule applies to his vendee.—Johnson v. Coffin, 273 P. 486, 127 Kan. 405.

Loss suffered by mortgagee

Contract to purchase land subject to mortgage made purchaser, as to mortgagor, primarily liable for mortgage debt, and, where purchaser in consideration of postponement of mortgage foreclosure proceedings indemnified mortgagee to extent of amount of taxes in arrears against ultimate deficiency in mortgage security and failed to consummate the purchase, and mortgagee sustained a net loss after application of indemnity, but executed satisfaction of mortgage bond, purchaser's assignee was not entitled, because of such release, to return of indemnity.—Bater v. Cleaver, 176 A. 889, 114 N.J.Law 346.

Purchase subject to a number of mortgages

One who purchased subject to four mortgages and paid the first is not subrogated thereto so as to defeat the other mortgages.—Guernsey v. Kendall, 55 Vt. 201.

to a volunteer.⁹⁵ Thus, where money due on the mortgage is paid by such purchaser, it is in the nature of an equitable assignment, substituting him who pays in the place of the mortgagee,⁹⁶ and it makes no difference whether he took an assignment of the mortgage as a release, or whether a discharge was made and evidence of the debt canceled;⁹⁷ and no proof of intention on his part to keep the mortgage alive is necessary to give him the benefit of it.⁹⁸ The purchaser's right of subrogation to the mortgage he discharged includes its priority over junior liens⁹⁹ of which he did not have actual knowledge,¹ where he was not culpably negligent in failing to learn of the junior lien,² even though he had constructive notice thereof.³ Even where the mortgage is discharged of record, the purchaser may be subrogated thereto as against junior lienors who did not change their position in reliance on the recorded discharge.⁴ Whether one who purchases subject to a mortgage which he discharges is subrogated to the mortgagee's rights

in other security he holds for the payment of the mortgage debt has been held to depend on the equities of the case and whether the price paid by the purchaser, including the discharge of the mortgage, is in excess of the value of the land.⁵ Where the purchaser is compelled to pay a mortgage which was released by a guardian without authority, he is subrogated to the guardian's rights as to the substituted security taken by the guardian,⁶ although he cannot compel the guardian first to resort to such security.⁷ Where a mortgagor conveys the property expressly subject to the mortgage and the purchaser reconveys, with a covenant against encumbrances not excepting the mortgage, and such purchaser satisfies the mortgage, he obtains no right of subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee.⁸

As a general rule, a purchaser who discharges a mortgage or deed of trust which he has assumed is not entitled to subrogation⁹ to the prejudice of a junior lien claimant of whose lien he had actual¹⁰ or constructive¹¹ notice at the time of payment, in

Where abstractor who issued certificate of title in which it was erroneously shown that certain property was free from mortgages subsequently paid mortgage on property, abstractor was volunteer and not entitled to recover payments made from original mortgagors, in absence of assignment of rights of purchasers for whom abstract was made, since no privity of contract existed between abstractor and original mortgagors, particularly where original mortgagors had notified abstractor they were not liable on mortgage.—Macfarlane v. the absence of an agreement between the parties that he will be subrogated,¹² or an assignment of the mortgage.¹³ This rule has been applied, even though the purchaser expended large sums of money in improving the premises and assumed and paid other liens thereon prior to the lien as to which he seeks priority.¹⁴ A purchaser of realty who assumes and discharges a mortgage, believing in good faith that he has good title, although he has no title, is entitled to subrogation,¹⁵ and there is authority holding that a purchaser who assumes a mortgage which he subsequently pays is subrogated thereto as against a junior lien of which he did not have actual knowledge at the time of the purchase,¹⁶ on the theory that the existence of the junior lien brings him within the rule permitting subrogation in favor of a purchaser whose title has failed.¹⁷

A purchaser who believed he was acquiring the fee but actually got only a life estate has been subrogated to the protection of a mortgage he assumed and discharged as against the remaindermen,¹⁸ but it has been held that one who purchases with knowledge of a mortgage which he subsequently discharges is not subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee as against the remaindermen when it develops that he acquired only a life estate and not the fee.¹⁹ A purchaser who assumed and paid a mortgage has been subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee as against the dower interest of his grantor's wife.²⁰ On the other hand, a purchaser assuming and discharging a mortgage under the belief that he was acquiring the full title has been denied subrogation, although he acquired only a half interest where he had constructive notice of the limitation on his interest,²¹ and a purchaser who assumed and discharged a mortgage on the entire tract has been denied subrogation, although the deed to him was deficient as to the quantity of land conveyed.²²

Where a grantee, assuming a mortgage, conveys to a third person who pays the mortgage in order to protect his title, such third person is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee,²³ particularly where he takes an assignment of the mortgage.²⁴ Where a grantee of a part of mortgaged premises assumes to pay the debt, but the grantee of the other part is compelled to pay in order to protect his interest, such latter grantee is not a mere volunteer,²⁵ and is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagor against the grantee assuming payment,²⁶ unless the payment is of only part of the obligation.²⁷ A purchaser assuming payment of a mortgage cannot, by suffering the mortgage to be foreclosed and purchasing the title of a purchaser at the foreclosure sale, obtain rights additional to those passing under the original conveyance.²⁸

Where the purchaser as part of the purchase price pays off an existing mortgage or deed of trust, or it is agreed that the purchase money shall be so used, so that the purchaser will receive a title free of the mortgage or deed of trust, the authorities are in sharp conflict as to the purchaser's right of subrogation.²⁹ Some author-

Assumption of all encumbrances

Reason for conflict

Such a purchaser is in a position similar to one who buys subject to a mortgage in that he acquires an interest in the property and pays the debt of another, but he is also in a position similar to a purchaser who assumes a mortgage in that he pays as a result of his own contractual obligation.—*Burgoon v. Defensive right Under statute providing that subrogation takes place of right for benefit of purchaser of any immovable property, who employs the price of his purchase in paying creditors, to whom the property was mortgaged, the subrogation acquired is an equitable defensive subrogation, intended to consolidate the property in the purchaser's hands, and protect him from eviction therefrom at the instance of other creditors, and, when amount paid by purchaser to mortgage creditors does not exceed the purchase price, the subrogation acquired is limited to the property purchased, and does not confer rights on purchaser to be actively exercised against third persons.—Waldron v. Moore, La.App., 11 So.2d 28—60 C.J. p 789 note 18 [b].

Partial subrogation

(1) Where payment by the purchaser only partially discharges the mortgage, he is entitled to be subrogated pro tanto as against subsequent encumbrances.—Joyce v. Dauntz, 45 N.E. 900, 55 Ohio St. 538.

(2) A purchaser under a contract entitling him to apply deferred purchase money to liens and encumbrances existing on the property, purchasing at fair value for less than the amount of a mortgage thereon, is entitled to be subrogated pro tanto.—Lazzell v. Keenan, 87 S.E. 80, 77 W.Va. 180.

he had actual knowledge,³⁶ although he will be allowed subrogation as against a junior lien of which he had no notice, actual or constructive.³⁷ Where the purchaser did not acquire title to the property, he is entitled to subrogation to the lien of the mortgage discharged,³⁸ and the purchaser has been held entitled to subrogation as against the dower interest of his grantor's wife who did not join in the conveyance.³⁹ Where land, encumbered by a mortgage, is subsequently mortgaged with power of sale, and is then conveyed to another who assumes both mortgages, and such grantee conveys to plaintiff by warranty deed subject to the first mortgage but with the undertaking of the grantee to have the second mortgage discharged, and the second mortgagee, under his power of sale, advertises the property for sale but is paid both the mortgage debt and expenses of advertising by plaintiff, plaintiff, as owner of the equity of redemption, is entitled to subrogation as against the original mortgagor for the amount of the mortgage debt,⁴⁰ but not for the expenses of advertising.⁴¹

b. Vendor's Lien

A purchaser of land encumbered by a vendor's lien may be entitled to be subrogated thereto as against junior encumbrances where he discharges the lien to protect his interest.

A purchaser of land encumbered by a vendor's lien, paying such lien in order to protect his interest, is not a mere volunteer,⁴² and may be entitled to be subrogated to the benefit of the lien as against a junior encumbrancer⁴³ or a coöwner,⁴⁴ and his right extends to his grantee.⁴⁵ It has been held that, where a purchaser under a warranty deed is compelled to free his land from a vendor's lien, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor paid, as against those personally liable for the debt secured by the vendor's lien.⁴⁶ Where, in accordance with the agreement of the parties, the purchase price is used to discharge a vendor's lien on the property, the purchaser has been held subrogated to the vendor's lien as against junior encumbrances.⁴⁷

Assumption of encumbrance. Where a grantee, as part consideration for the land, assumes and pays a vendor's lien note thereon, he thereby extinguishes the lien, and is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the lienholder.⁴⁸ However, having assumed the lien without knowledge of a junior deed of trust, on payment of the assumed lien he may be entitled to subrogation where the subsequent lienor has suffered no injury thereby.⁴⁹

Failure of title. A purchaser, having purchased his title or interest in good faith and having discharged a vendor's lien thereon, where his title is defective, is an equitable assignee of such lien⁵⁰ and is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the lienholder.⁵¹ So a purchaser, assuming as part of the purchase price a vendor's lien thereon, whose title is defective, is entitled to be subrogated to the vendor's rights.⁵² The grantee of property title to which fails by reason of a prior outstanding contract of sale to another of which he had notice has been subrogated to his grantor's rights as to the balance of the purchase price under the contract of sale.⁵³

Usurious transaction

Where a purchaser of bonds secured by a trust deed on premises subject to a prior mortgage agreed that part of the purchase price would be used to discharge the mortgage, if the agreement of sale is usurious and void, payment of the mortgage does not entitle the purchaser to subrogation.—Baldwin v. Moffett, 94 N.Y. 82.

c. Judgment Lien

One purchasing land without knowledge of a judgment lien thereon which he is compelled to pay is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor.

One purchasing land without knowledge of a judgment lien thereon which he is compelled to pay is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor,⁵⁴ and he may be subrogated to the judgment creditor's lien against other property of the judgment debtor;⁵⁵ and if, to save his land from sale, he has paid several judgment liens, he is entitled to be subrogated to the liens of such creditors against any other land of his vendor.⁵⁶ In like manner the vendee of land encumbered with judgment liens who deposits money in court to pay the senior judgment becomes subrogated to the rights of such judgment creditor to the extent of his payment, as against the junior judgment creditor,⁵⁷ although by mistake the amount deposited is not quite enough to satisfy the senior judgment in full.⁵⁸

In the absence of an agreement preventing application of the doctrine of subrogation, where a purchaser of land encumbered by judgment liens partially discharges a judgment thereon, it has been held that he is entitled to be subrogated pro tanto to the rights of the judgment creditor.⁵⁹ A grantee of land who, through neglect to record his deed, has had the land taken from him on execution issued on a judgment rendered against his grantor, in an action on a debt secured by a mortgage of the grantor's other land, may maintain a bill in equity against his grantor and the judgment creditor to be subrogated, to the extent of his loss by the levy, to all the rights of the latter under the mortgage not required for the full satisfaction of the debt.⁶⁰ So, a purchaser of attached property who, even after suit, uses the purchase money to discharge existing judgment liens is entitled to subrogation

where the property is decreed to be sold.⁶¹ Where a judgment debtor conveyed part of his land, the grantee assuming the judgment debt, the grantee of the rest of the land, being compelled to pay the judgment for his own protection, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor against the one who assumed the judgment,⁶² and his claim is entitled to priority over that of a purchaser at a foreclosure sale of a mortgage subsequently given.⁶³ Where one in possession of land under a contract of purchase buys at an execution sale on a judgment against his vendor, he is subrogated to the creditor's rights against his vendor, and to the vendor's rights in the surplus of the purchase price.⁶⁴

Failure of title. Where a purchaser of land encumbered by judgment liens has discharged such liens, but his title fails, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the lienholders.⁶⁵

d. Chattel Mortgage; Deed of Trust; Conditional Sale

A purchaser of a chattel from a mortgagee may be subrogated to the rights of his grantor, and a purchaser of a chattel who discharges the lien of a conditional seller has been held entitled to subrogation.

In general, a bona fide purchaser from a chattel mortgagee will, under principles of subrogation, succeed to all the rights of his grantor,⁶⁶ even though he has no contract of assignment.⁶⁷ So, where a chattel, encumbered with other chattels by a chattel mortgage, is sold and, by consent of the parties, the purchase money credited as part payment of the debt secured by the mortgage, such purchaser is not a mere stranger or volunteer,⁶⁸ and the equitable doctrine of subrogation applies for his protection,⁶⁹ particularly when receiving an assignment of the mortgage.⁷⁰ However, under the general principle that one seeking subrogation must come into court with clean hands, as discussed supra

§ 6, where purchasers of a chattel encumbered by a mortgage, on being convicted of conversion, have paid such judgment, such payment does not entitle them to be subrogated to the right of the chattel mortgagee.⁷¹ A purchaser of chattels, encumbered by a deed of trust, on being compelled to discharge the lien in order to protect his interest, is not a mere volunteer,⁷² and is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the trust deed.⁷³

A purchaser of a chattel who assumes and pays a mortgage thereon is not entitled to subrogation.⁷⁴ Where a purchaser of land encumbered by a chattel mortgage assumes payment of the mortgage as part of the purchase price, he is not entitled to be subrogated to the benefits of the encumbrance.⁷⁵

Failure of title. A purchaser of a chattel who, in good faith of his title or interest, although not having title or interest, discharges a chattel mortgage thereon is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the chattel mortgagee.⁷⁶

Conditional sale. A purchaser of a chattel who discharges the lien of a conditional seller has been held entitled to subrogation.⁷⁷

Purchaser of pledged property. A purchaser of stock pledged as collateral security, the purchase money discharging the debt for which the pledge was made, becomes subrogated to the rights of the pledgee, where he acquired no title because of the pledgee's want of authority to sell.⁷⁸

§ 34. — Purchasers of Equity of Redemption

One who purchases a naked equity of redemption as such and pays for nothing more is not subrogated to the lien of a mortgage which he pays off.

One who purchases a naked equity of redemption as such and pays for nothing more is not subrogated to the lien of a mortgage which he pays off,⁷⁹ since he has received all the estate he purchased and paid for.⁸⁰

Redemption. One, not a volunteer, redeeming from the foreclosure of an encumbrance has been held to be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the purchaser at the foreclosure sale⁸¹ and to the lien of the encumbrance.⁸² It has been said that, where the purchaser of land at an execution sale accepts money tendered for redemption by a person not entitled to redeem, the person paying the money will be subrogated to the purchaser's right to the deed.⁸³

§ 35. — Purchasers at Execution, Foreclosure, Judicial, and Similar Sales

Where necessary in order to secure equity to a purchaser at an execution or judicial sale, he may be subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose claim the purchase money paid, and such subrogation is generally awarded a purchaser at an invalid execution or judicial sale.

may be subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose claim the purchase money paid, and the grantee of the purchaser is likewise entitled to be subrogated to such rights.⁸⁶ Thus one purchasing at the foreclosure of a mortgage or deed of trust may be subrogated to the mortgage or deed of trust.⁸⁷ Where part of the purchase price at a foreclosure sale is used to discharge a prior encumbrance, the purchaser has been held entitled to subrogation to such prior encumbrance,⁸⁸ but, where the payment of such prior liens is made by order of the court, subrogation has been denied on the theory that it is the money of the debtor, not that of the purchaser, that is used to discharge the liens.⁸⁹ Where land encumbered by judgment liens is sold at a partition sale, the purchaser agreeing that the purchase money will be applied to discharging the judgments, the purchaser is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditors.⁹⁰ Where property was foreclosed under a deed of trust and the purchaser transferred the purchase certificate to the owner and took back a new deed of trust, he has been denied subrogation as against an intervening lien of which he had knowledge.⁹¹

The general rule discussed supra § 32 that a purchaser who discharges an encumbrance which he is not primarily obligated to pay is entitled to be subrogated to the encumbrance discharged applies in favor of a purchaser at an execution⁹² or judicial⁹³ sale. The buyer of lands under a decree in partition, who paid the full purchase price and then discovered judgments which were liens against the individual interests of some of the owners and paid them, is entitled to be subrogated, with respect to the purchase price, to the rights of such distributees as should have paid the judgments.⁹⁴ A purchaser at an execution sale may, before the time for redemption expires, pay the debt secured by a prior trust deed and be subrogated thereto,⁹⁵ and, where purchasers of land at a sale by virtue of a deed of trust pay notes secured by a lien on the land superior to the trust lien, they are not volunteers⁹⁶ and are entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the payee.⁹⁷ However, it has been held that a purchaser at a chattel mortgage foreclosure sale who buys goods which are sold subject to a lien for rent is not, on payment of the lien, entitled to be subrogated to the lienor's rights.⁹⁸ The doctrine of subrogation has been held unavailable to a purchaser seeking to have his payment of a prior lien applied toward the purchase price.⁹⁹ It has been held that a purchaser at a sheriff's sale for a debt of a husband, who pays a mortgage which had been given by the husband and his wife on land owned by them as tenants in common as security for a debt of the husband, is not entitled to be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights as against the wife's interest;¹ and that, in the case of an administrator's sale of land subject to a mortgage by husband and wife, where the purchaser discharges the mortgage, he is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee as against the widow's right

(1) Where money bid by purchaser at mortgage foreclosure sale does not discharge mortgage debt in full, purchaser is not subrogated to whole debt, but only pro tanto to extent of bid.—Nodaway County v. Alumbaugh, 153 S.W.2d 74, 348 Mo. 354.

of dower.² A purchaser under a judgment against a vendor has been denied subrogation to the vendor's lien for the purchase price, where notes given for the price were in the possession of third persons.³

As against the purchaser at an execution sale, it has been held that the execution debtor will not be substituted to the rights of the holder of a prior mortgage lien by paying the debt which it secures,⁴ and this rule extends to the enforcement of the prior mortgage lien by a sale of the property and its purchase by a third person with funds belonging to the execution debtor.⁵ Where goods are attached and sold by the sheriff who pays liens out of the proceeds, one of the attaching creditors who is not paid in full is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the lien discharged.⁶

Invalid sales. While it has been held that a purchaser at a void execution sale is a mere volunteer⁷ and is not subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose claim his payment is used to discharge,⁸ the decided preponderance of authority⁹ is that a purchaser in good faith at a void execution¹⁰ or judicial¹¹ sale is not a volunteer, and, in purchasing at such void execution¹² or judicial¹³ sale, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of creditors to the payment of whom the purchase money was applied. So, where the purchase money of an invalid execution¹⁴ or judicial¹⁵ sale is applied to the discharge of encumbrances, the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of the encumbrances discharged. Further, a purchaser under a decree, obtained without appearance of defendant, on an attachment on land as property of defendant, in which he has only an equity, without designating it to be such, who has paid off the vendor's lien, will be subrogated to the vendor's rights.¹⁶ So a purchaser of land at an invalid sale under partition proceedings, taking deed without warranty, acquires all the rights of the heirs at the time of sale.¹⁷

On the other hand, it has been held that the right of subrogation extends only to a purchaser in good faith.¹⁸ If there was no subsisting lien to be discharged by the purchaser at the sale made under a decree of foreclosure of a vendor's lien, there is no room for subrogation, as the purchaser could not occupy a better position than plaintiff in the void decree.¹⁹ Where land was sold to satisfy a claim against an estate, but one of the heirs was not made party to the proceeding, it has been held that the purchaser is not entitled to subrogation to the claim discharged or to the right of the other heirs to contribution as against the heir not party to the proceeding.²⁰

§ 36. — Subsequent Encumbrancers

As a general rule a junior encumbrancer who discharges a senior lien for the protection of his own interest is entitled to subrogation to the lien discharged.

A junior encumbrancer who, in order to preserve his own security, is compelled to pay a prior encumbrance held by another is not a mere volunteer,²¹ and, as equitable assignee,²² is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the prior lienor whose lien he has paid,²³ including all securities held by such prior encumbrancer.²⁴ In some jurisdictions this is the rule by reason of statute.²⁵

On the other hand, subrogation has been denied on the theory that the remedy of subrogation is restricted to cases where there exists a relation of principal and surety or guarantors, or other specified relation which entitles the payor to succeed to the rights of the person paid.²⁶ Subrogation will not be granted where the payment is voluntary, as where a junior mortgagee pays an installment of a senior mortgage without a necessity of protecting his interest.²⁷ Thus, where a valid tender of payment of his claim is made to the junior lienor, he no longer has any interest in the property and his subsequent discharge of a senior encumbrance is voluntary and does not entitle him to subrogation,²⁸ and, where the mortgagee pays prior encumbrances as an advance to the debtor and not for the protection of his mortgage interest, subrogation to the encumbrances will be denied.²⁹ A senior encumbrancer discharging a junior encumbrance is a mere volunteer and is not entitled to subrogation since he does not act for the protection of his interest.³⁰ On the same principle, in order to entitle a junior encumbrancer to subrogation, the lien discharged must rest on the land subject to his encumbrance and not on any other lands.³¹ Where the junior encumbrancer is primarily liable for the debt secured by the senior encumbrance, as where he has assumed it, he is not entitled to subrogation on discharging the senior encumbrance.³²

Compulsion

Generally, the right of subrogation is given to one who, having a lien on specific property, discharges a prior lien thereon in order to protect his own claim, and the general rule applies notwithstanding he was not compelled to do so.—Diehl v. Hanrahan, 155 P.2d 853, 68 Cal.App.2d 32.

Lien for material

Where purchaser of lot took possession before execution and delivery of deed and built house thereon, giving notes to lumber company for materials used, and lumber company filed lien against property on claim against purchaser, cost of materials was purchaser's debt rather than vendor's obligation under covenant of warranty in deed, and, hence, vendor had lien superior to interest of purchaser's grantee for amounts paid by vendor on purchaser's notes.—Robertson v. Subrogation as against other liens denied

Holder of junior mortgage who assumed payment of prior mortgage cannot, by assignment or subrogation, keep superior lien alive as against other liens.—Morris v. Twichell, supra.

Ordinarily a junior chattel mortgagee,³³ junior mortgagee,³⁴ a beneficiary³⁵ or trustee³⁶ of a junior deed of trust, or a junior judgment creditor,³⁷ who, in order to preserve his own security, is compelled to pay a prior encumbrance held by another is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the prior lienor or mortgagee whose lien or mortgage he has paid, to the extent of the amount paid.³⁸ A judgment creditor is entitled to subrogation to a chattel mortgage which he discharges in order to enforce or protect his lien on the attached property,³⁹ even though it is subsequently determined that the debtor had no interest in the property.⁴⁰ The fact that there are liens or encumbrances inferior to the encumbrance discharged does not affect the right to subrogation.⁴¹ Where the junior mortgagee discharges a prior encumbrance and is subrogated thereto, the prior encumbrance does not become subordinated to intervening encumbrances, but retains its priority over such intervening encumbrances.⁴² Moreover, a junior encumbrancer who takes up a prior encumbrance, which was also a lien on property other than that bound by the second, may resort to the property bound by the first encumbrance and not bound by the second, and enforce the lien of the first on it;⁴³ and a junior judgment creditor who, on the fraudulent representations of his debtor that there are no other liens, advances money to redeem lands from a prior judgment sale, is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the purchaser at such sale, in order to protect himself from the lien of a judgment prior to his own, of which he was ignorant at the time of the redemption, although the owner of such judgment was innocent of the fraud.⁴⁴

Where an encumbrance is discharged as consideration for the giving of a mortgage, it has been held that the mortgagee is entitled to subrogation to the encumbrance discharged;⁴⁵ but it has also been held that subrogation will be denied under such circumstances unless there was an understanding or agreement for subrogation.⁴⁶ Subrogation to an encumbrance discharged in consideration of the mortgage has been denied as against intervening liens of which the mortgagee had notice,⁴⁷ but

Fact that creditor had second mortgage on part only of tract subject to first mortgage did not prevent creditor, on payment, from being subrogated to first mortgagee's rights.—Decuir v. Carnes, 138 So. 103, 173 La. 563.

Lien not in existence

Ordinarily a junior mortgagee is not entitled to be subrogated to a lien which did not exist when his mortgage was taken.—Anthes v. Schroeder, 103 N.W. 1072, 74 Neb. 172.

Wife's equitable title

Where husband, after divorce decree giving his wife equitable title, executed second mortgage without her knowledge, right of second mortgagee, satisfying first mortgage, to be subrogated to lien thereof, was subject to wife's right to redeem by paying amount actually advanced by second mortgagee to discharge first mortgage indebtedness.—Whitson v. subrogation has been allowed where the junior lienholder is not prejudiced and not placed in any position worse than that in which he would be if the senior encumbrance had not been discharged,⁴⁸ and it has also been held that, where there is an agreement for subrogation, the mortgagee's knowledge of intervening liens does not bar his right to subrogation as against such liens.⁴⁹

Where the mortgagee had no knowledge of the intervening lien at the time he paid the prior encumbrance, he is entitled to subrogation to the protection thereof as against the intervening lien.⁵⁰ Where the mortgage or other security given in consideration of the discharge of an encumbrance is invalid, the mortgagee will be subrogated to the lien of encumbrance which he discharged,⁵¹ and one discharging an encumbrance in reliance on a promise that he will be given security is entitled to subrogation where the new security is not given.⁵² While there is authority that a third person who discharges a prior deed of trust under false representations that an intervening lienholder had agreed to give the third person's security priority will be entitled to subrogation even though the transaction involving the third person is usurious,⁵³ there is also authority to the contrary.⁵⁴ A tender which fails to discharge the prior lien because it is accompanied by conditions which the subsequent mortgagee is not entitled to make will not subrogate the subsequent mortgagee to the lien of the prior mortgage;⁵⁵ and the mere fact that inferior lienors, acting in their own interests and to accomplish a purpose of their own, have incidentally benefited a superior lienor does not

subrogate them to the rights of the superior lienor.⁵⁶

The right of subrogation does not exist in favor of the holder of a second mortgage to the prejudice of a first mortgage.⁵⁷ Thus, a junior mortgagee has been denied subrogation as against the senior mortgagee where he paid taxes and assessments without notice to the senior mortgagee of the mortgagor's default, since the senior mortgagee was thereby deprived of his right to foreclose for the mortgagor's default,⁵⁸ particularly where the junior mortgagee has been collecting the rents and profits.⁵⁹ A junior lienholder who, without knowledge of prior lienholders, takes possession of a wrecked motor vehicle and causes it to be repaired is not, although he pays for the repairs, entitled to be subrogated to the repairman's lien rights.⁶⁰ Subrogation will not be allowed as against one who acted in reliance on the recorded release of an earlier encumbrance.⁶¹ Thus, one who took a mortgage and paid and discharged an earlier mortgage has been denied subrogation to the discharged mortgage as against another who before the mortgage was recorded gave and recorded a mortgage in reliance on the recorded discharge of the earlier mortgage.⁶² The holder of a deed of trust fraudulent as to creditors has been denied subrogation against creditors where he discharges a prior deed of trust.⁶³

Part payment of senior claim. As a general rule, a junior encumbrancer who pays part of the claim of the senior encumbrancer is not entitled to partial subrogation to the senior encumbrance, as against the senior encumbrancer, where such subrogation would prejudice the senior encumbrancer.⁶⁴ So, as

Insufficient notice

In mortgage foreclosure suit wherein junior mortgagee contended that he was entitled to first lien for taxes, insurance, and repair costs he had paid on mortgaged property, fact that senior mortgagee knew that junior mortgagee was forwarding money for taxes was insufficient notice to senior mortgagee that money a general rule, a junior mortgagee, who claims to be entitled to subrogation, stands in the same position in respect of a partial payment of the senior mortgage debt as a surety does in respect of a partial payment of a claim against his principal;⁶⁵ and, in the absence of an agreement for subrogation, a junior encumbrancer,⁶⁶ chattel mortgagee,⁶⁷ or mortgagee,⁶⁸ by the payment of part of the senior mortgage, is not subrogated pro tanto to the senior mortgagee's interest. However, when the right of subrogation is the result of an express agreement, it is no objection that it extends only to a part of a chattel mortgage⁶⁹ or mortgage.⁷⁰ A junior mortgagee who, for the protection of his own security, pays an installment due on the first mortgage, has been, to the extent of such advancement, as against the mortgagor, subrogated to the rights of the holder of the first mortgage,⁷¹ each installment being regarded as an entire debt,⁷² and may, on payment by the mortgagor of the balance due on the prior mortgage, enforce by action his lien for the amount so advanced.⁷³ If the junior mortgagee has paid a part of the prior mortgage under the belief arising from the conduct or representations of the senior mortgagee that this was the full extent of his claim, he may be allowed a priority of his claim before the senior mortgagee can participate.⁷⁴

Where the mortgagor pays the mortgage after he has conveyed the property, he is ordinarily entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.

Where a grantor, mortgagor, or chattel mortgagor conveys the mortgaged property, and his grantee assumes payment of the mortgage, as between such parties the former becomes a surety and the latter the principal debtor, and, in accordance with the general rule, discussed infra § 47, that a surety who pays the debt of the principal is subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditor, where the grantor⁷⁶ or mortgagor⁷⁷ or a chattel mortgagor⁷⁸ pays the debts secured, he is entitled to subrogation thereto, and to all of the rights of the mortgagee,⁷⁹ and may foreclose the mortgage for his own benefit,⁸⁰ sue to recover the land,⁸¹ or sue the vendee in an action at law for money paid.⁸² Similarly, where one sells land which is subject to a vendor's lien which is assumed by the purchaser, the seller, on being compelled to discharge the lien, is subrogated thereto.⁸³ The mortgaged property is generally regarded as the primary fund for the payment of the mortgage so that a mortgagor who pays the mortgage after he has transferred the property is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, even though his transferee has not assumed the mortgage,⁸⁴ and his right to be subrogated to the position of the prior mortgagee is not defeated by his having taken a second mortgage⁸⁵ or bond⁸⁶ as security. So, where land is conveyed subject to a judgment lien, and the vendor discharges the lien, his assignee is entitled to be subrogated thereto as against such grantee,⁸⁷ or an assignee of the grantee not a bona fide purchaser without notice of the judgment lien.⁸⁸

If the grantee does not assume the mortgage, he does not incur any personal liability for the payment of the debt, so that the mortgagor or grantor who pays the mortgage is not subrogated to any personal claim against the grantee.⁸⁹ Where a mortgagor conveys by a warranty deed without excepting the mortgage, he is not subrogated to the mortgage which he subsequently discharges.⁹⁰ One who executed a lien on the property after assuming a mortgage thereon has been denied subrogation as against the lienor where, after transferring the land, he discharges the mortgage.⁹¹ Where the mortgagor gives the purchaser notes as security against a mortgage on the property and, after the mortgage has been discharged, the purchaser collects the notes and conveys the land on security of a purchase-money mortgage, the mortgagor is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the purchase-money mortgage to the amount of the notes, at least where the rights of third persons do not intervene.⁹² Where a mortgage, after being pledged as security for a note, was assigned, and the mortgagor thereafter paid the note and received the note and mortgage, he is subrogated in the place of the payee of the note as his assignee, and will be allowed the amount paid as credit on the mortgage on foreclosure by the assignee thereof.⁹³

Where the mortgagor conveys the mortgaged premises to one assuming the mortgage, who thereafter conveys and takes a junior mortgage from his grantee as a part of the purchase price, the mortgagor, on being compelled to pay a deficiency after sale of the premises on foreclosure of the first mortgage, has a right in equity as surety to redeem which is paramount to the statutory right of his grantee as a junior lienholder.—Wise v. § 38. Third Persons Advancing Means to Discharge Debt or Encumbrance Securing It

In order that third persons who advance the means to discharge a debt or encumbrance securing it may be entitled to subrogation, it is essential that there be an assignment, legal or equitable, from the creditor, or an agreement or understanding with the debtor that such third persons shall in effect become creditors, or that such third persons have acted because of their own liability or to protect an interest of their own.

In order that a third person advancing the means to discharge a debt or encumbrance securing it may be entitled to subrogation there must be an assignment, legal or equitable, from the original creditor,⁹⁴ or an agreement or understanding on the part of the person liable to pay that the person furnishing the money to pay the debt shall in effect become the creditor,⁹⁵ or the person furnishing the money must have done so because he is liable as surety or in some other secondary capacity,⁹⁶ or for the purpose of protecting some real⁹⁷ or supposed⁹⁸ right or interest of his own. Hence, the mere fact that, at the instance of the debtor, a third person lends money with which to pay a debt or obligation, does not entitle the lender to subrogation to a lien held for the enforcement of the debt or obligation.⁹⁹ So a third person who, on his own motion, advances money to discharge a debt is regarded as a mere volunteer,¹ and, in the absence of an agreement for subrogation, cannot be subrogated to the rights of the creditor as to security held by the creditor.²

A third person who lends money to pay a debt at the instance of the debtor, with an agreement or understanding with the debtor that he shall be entitled to the benefit of the security held by the creditor, in the absence of intervening equities,³ will

Advance by junior lienholder

The mere fact that a junior lienholder advances money which has been used by the borrower to discharge superior liens does not entitle the lender to be subrogated to the rights of the lienholders so paid.—Iberville Planting & Mfg. Co. v. Monongahela Coal Co., La., 168 F. 12, 93 C.C.A. 404.

be subrogated to all the rights of the creditor whose claim has been discharged,⁴ as against the debtor.⁵ The agreement in which subrogation may be based may be either express⁶ or clearly⁷ implied,⁸ although it is disputed whether a mere understanding is sufficient.⁹ So a person who advances money to another which is used to discharge a valid preëxisting lien on property, if not a mere volunteer, is entitled by subrogation to all the remedies which the original lienholder possessed as against the property.¹⁰ Thus, a third person, having agreed to advance money to discharge an encumbrance on property of another, where he is not a volunteer,¹¹ and where payment is made under an agreement that he will be substituted in place of the holder of the encumbrance,¹² is entitled to subrogation, whether such agreement is express¹³ or whether such agree-

Under doctrine of conventional subrogation, where lender of money lent it with intention that he be substituted to position of creditor whose debt was paid with the money, but without taking an assignment, and there were no intervening equities to be prejudiced, the matter would be treated as if an assignment had been executed.—Federal Land Bank of Baltimore v. Lien of equal dignity

(1) It is held to be essential to the operation of the text rule that the parties contemplate that the person advancing the money will have security of equal dignity with the lien discharged.—Federal Land Bank of New Orleans v. Henderson, Black & Merrill Co., 42 So.2d 829, 253 Ala. 54—Groom v. Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, 199 So. 237, 240 Ala. 335.

(2) Accordingly, in the absence of facts from which such understanding could be implied, one advancing money to satisfy a secured claim against a debtor was not entitled to subrogation as a secured creditor.—In re Lauer, D.C.N.J., 38 F.Supp. 691.

11. Ala.—Federal Land Bank of New Orleans v. Henderson, Black & Merrill Co., 42 So.2d 829, 253 Ala. 54—Groom v. Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, 199 So. 237, 240 Ala. 335.

Agreement with debtor or creditor

One who advances money, under agreement with either debtor or creditor that he shall acquire rights which persons paid had under a bond or other contract, is not a volunteer with respect to right to subrogation.—Western Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Meyer, 192 S.W.2d 388, 301 Ky. 487, 164 A.L.R. 769.

Legal or conventional subrogation

(1) Where a lender in no way related to property and not required to protect any interest advances money to pay off lien, there is no legal subrogation, the case being one of conventional subrogation, if any.—Martin v. Hickenlooper, 59 P.2d 1139, 90 Utah 150, 107 A.L.R. 762, rehearing denied 61 P.2d 307, 90 Utah 185.

ment is implied.¹⁴ Under a mortgage trust agreement creating a prior lien in favor of a bondholder who pays ground rent with respect to which the mortgagor is in default, and providing for notice to the trustee, a bondholder advancing money for such purpose is not entitled to subrogation where he fails to give proper and timely notice.¹⁵

Since legal subrogation may take place with or without an agreement, as discussed supra § 3, where it is equitable that a person furnishing money to pay a debt of another should be substituted for the creditor or in the place of the creditor he will be so subrogated,¹⁶ as where the money is advanced on a mistake of fact and no interests of third persons have intervened¹⁷ and where the parties to the transaction have not altered their positions.¹⁸ So a third person who advances money to discharge a debt or lien securing it, under circumstances which would operate as a fraud against him, if he were not subrogated, is entitled to subrogation.¹⁹

Application of payment. Before a third person advancing money to discharge a debt or encumbrance will be entitled to subrogation it is necessary that the money advanced be so applied,²⁰ and the duty devolves on the person seeking subrogation to see that such application is made;²¹ his right to subrogation, if any, will be measured by the amount actually applied.²² Accordingly, where part of the proceeds of a loan secured by a pledge, which is unenforceable, is applied to pay a balance remaining due on a prior loan the lender may, to the extent of such application, be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor under the prior loan.²³ It has been indicated that no right to subrogation can arise where the money advanced is to be applied at the discretion of the debtor.²⁴

Existence of claim or obligation. In accordance with the rule that there must exist a claim or obligation against a debtor to be subrogated to, as considered supra § 7, in order that a third person advancing money to pay a debt or discharge a lien may be entitled to subrogation, it is essential that such a claim or obligation exists.²⁵

Extent of security. The new creditor who is entitled to subrogation on advancing money to pay outstanding indebtedness is entitled to all of the security of the old creditor,²⁶ and he is entitled to such protection to secure a legitimate rate of interest provided for in the new loan, notwithstanding such rate is higher than that provided by the outstanding indebtedness.²⁷

Part payment of debt. In accordance with the general rule discussed supra § 10, in order that a third person advancing the means to discharge a debt may be entitled to subrogation, it is essential that the whole debt be discharged,²⁸ but it has been held that this rule is not to be invoked for the protection of the debtor.²⁹

Reliance on defective or invalid security. If a loan is made for the purpose of discharging a lien on property of the borrower, in reliance on security which turns out to be defective or invalid, the lender will be subrogated to the lien discharged from his money;³⁰ and, where a third person advances money to discharge the encumbrance on property of another, with the express³¹ or implied³² understanding that he is to obtain a first lien, but fails to obtain such lien, equity will require that the first lien be kept alive, if necessary to protect the lender³³ who is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the encumbrancer paid from his money.³⁴

Priority. The third person's right to subrogation is usually regarded as superior to all those inferior to the encumbrance paid,³⁵ including intervening liens or encumbrances of which the third person is ignorant,³⁶ provided such ignorance does not amount to culpable or unjustifiable negligence,³⁷ and as against encumbrancers who have not changed their position because of the transaction.³⁸

Particular debts or encumbrances. The mere fact that money lent to a devisee of realty charged with payment of legacies is appropriated by such devisee to such payment does not entitle the lender to be subrogated to the rights of the legatees.³⁹ Where rent money is advanced to a tenant under a sale agreement, the lender is not subrogated to the lien of the landlord.⁴⁰ A loan of money to a county or board of education for a purpose other than to discharge outstanding warrants does not entitle the lender to be subrogated to the warrant holders paid out of the money.⁴¹ Where a senior mortgagee requires payment of certain tax liens as a condition to permitting deferred payment of matured mortgages, a junior mortgagee who lends the mortgagor money to discharge the liens does not thereby become subrogated to them as against the senior mortgagee.⁴² In the absence of interest or an agreement, a son who lends to his father funds to pay tax assessments is not entitled to be subrogated to the tax lien.⁴³ Moreover, in the absence of agreement, fraud, accident, or mistake, where a borrower's lack of power to convey property is a matter of record a third person lending money is not entitled to subrogation merely because it is used to discharge tax liens, in the absence of a showing that such money was lent without knowledge of the condition of the title.⁴⁴ Where, however, under an agreement for subrogation, money is advanced to discharge liens owed by another, the lender is entitled to be subrogated to the lien so discharged,⁴⁵ and one who lends money which is used to pay local improvement assessments may be subrogated to the liens of such assessments.⁴⁶ A holder of municipal bonds originally secured by assessments against property owners for municipal improvements may, with respect to a special assessment fund, be subrogated to the rights of other bondholders who have been favored by the municipality.⁴⁷ Under a statutory provision that refunding bondholders shall be subrogated to all the rights of the holders of the original municipal indebtedness, the holders of refunding bonds have the same rights as the holders of the original obligations.⁴⁸ Where one advances money to a corporation to take up its note and receives from the corporation corporate bonds to secure the repayment, he cannot also avail himself of a mortgage executed by the corporation to the indorser of the note.⁴⁹

A person who lends or advances money to an executor or administrator on a promise by note or other contract may, where such money is used to pay estate debts and where the representative is entitled to reimbursement from the estate for the debts paid by him, be subrogated to his right of reimbursement from the estate.⁵⁰ This is particularly true where it clearly appears that the money advanced has been applied beneficially in the payment of estate debts,⁵¹ and where the money is advanced or paid to an executor de son tort or creditor of the estate and applied by him to estate debts.⁵² The rule applies only to the extent that the money advanced has been actually used in the payment of debts for which the estate was legally bound,⁵³ or is otherwise used to benefit the estate.⁵⁴ The right of one advancing money, used to pay estate debts, to enforce the original claim on which the advance is made may render reliance on the doctrine of subrogation unnecessary.⁵⁵

§ 39. — Mortgage or Deed of Trust

- a. In general
- b. Loan or discharge under agreement

a. In General

The mere fact that money lent is applied by the borrower in payment of a mortgage, which is thus extinguished, does not entitle the lender to be subrogated to the lien of the mortgage extinguished. Where the mortgage has been foreclosed, a redemptioner who is not himself liable as a principal debtor, but who is compelled to redeem for the protection of his own lien on the mortgaged premises, is entitled to subrogation to the rights of the senior mortgage.

The mere fact that money lent is applied by the borrower in payment of a mortgage, which is thus extinguished, does not entitle the lender to be subrogated to the lien of the mortgage extinguished,⁵⁶ nor does the fact that, from the proceeds of a later encumbrance, prior mortgages have been paid in order that the lien might be removed afford ground for subrogation thereto;⁵⁷ nor can the lender be subrogated to the rights of a prior mortgagee where his mortgage has been paid, without the consent of the mortgagor, out of the proceeds of a subsequent invalid mortgage executed by an agent without authority.⁵⁸ So, the fact that a subsequent mortgagee's lien will occupy the same relation to the property, if one who has advanced money, secured by a mortgage on the real estate, to pay off the prior mortgage is subrogated to the rights of the holder of such mortgage, affords no reason why equity should permit the person so advancing the money to be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the first mortgage.⁵⁹ While the status of the deed of trust discharged by borrowed money may be considered in determining the lender's right to subrogation,⁶⁰ it is not in itself sufficient that the status of other lienors will not be affected by the subrogation.⁶¹

In the absence of an agreement for subrogation, one who advances the means of discharging a mortgage or deed of trust is a mere stranger or volunteer who is not entitled to subrogation,⁶² particularly where subrogation would result in manifest injustice to an innocent person such as a junior mortgagee.⁶³

Business venture

Bank lending money to executrix who used greater part thereof in business venture was not entitled to subrogated lien against assets of estate for money advanced.—E. H. Shelman & Co., Incorporated Bankers, v. Livers' Ex'x, 16 S.W.2d 800, 229 Ky. 90.

Taxes on property of estate

Where executor borrowed from bank money which was used to discharge executor's statutory duty to pay taxes due on property of the testator's estate, bank was entitled to the executor's right of reimbursement.—Dixon v. Davis, D.C.S.C., 31 F. Supp. 912.

Fact of discharge and intent

The fact that money advanced by volunteer actually discharged mortgage and was intended to be applied to that purpose does not alter the text rule.—Schuetz v. Schuetz, 296 N.W. 70, 237 Wis. 1.—Bank of Baraboo v. Prothero, 255 N.W. 126, 215 Wis. 552.

Manifest injustice toward second mortgagee

Where subrogation of a lender taking third mortgage on portion of block as security for loan of money to pay off first mortgage on entire

As against a person on whose interest the mortgage discharged by reason of the loan was not a charge, no right of subrogation can exist.⁶⁴ Where there is no evidence that the lender gave or lent the money, expecting it to be paid on the mortgage or on any particular indebtedness, the right of subrogation to the mortgage does not exist⁶⁵ and a person advancing money to another to enable him therewith to make a loan to a third person, on the security of an equitable mortgage, is not entitled to subrogation thereby.⁶⁶

One who, having no interest to protect, voluntarily lends money to a mortgagor for the purpose of satisfying and canceling the mortgage, taking a new mortgage for his own security, cannot have the former mortgage revived and himself subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee therein,⁶⁷ especially where the mortgage securing such voluntary loan covers more of the mortgagor's property, and is for a greater indebtedness.⁶⁸ One who advances money on a mortgage on the strength of false representations that there was but one other encumbrance on the premises, and that such money would be applied to the payment thereof, but which was in fact applied in payment of notes secured by another mortgage, will not be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in the second mortgage where there was no agreement therefor.⁶⁹

of subrogation to the rights of the holder thereof can exist,⁷⁰ particularly where inequity would result from subrogation.⁷¹ The mere fact that part of the proceeds of a subsequent mortgage was applied by the mortgagor in discharge of a purchase-money mortgage does not entitle the subsequent mortgagee to subrogation to the rights of the purchase-money mortgage.⁷²

On foreclosure; redemption. A redemptioner who is compelled to redeem for the protection of his own lien on the mortgaged premises is entitled to subrogation to the rights of the senior mortgagee,⁷³ unless he is himself liable as a principal debtor.⁷⁴ A redemptioner may be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee or foreclosure sale purchaser where the equities demand it,⁷⁵ as where he is a surety for the payment of the mortgage debt;⁷⁶ but the right to subrogation does not necessarily flow from the right of redemption.⁷⁷ A redemption by one not authorized to redeem gives no right of subrogation to the redemptioner,⁷⁸ but subrogation has been allowed to a redemptioner who believed himself to be the owner of the property but who was thereafter held to have no title thereto.⁷⁹ One furnishing money to redeem a homestead from a mortgage foreclosure does not lose his right to subrogation merely because he agrees to take a mortgage from the homestead claimant.⁸⁰ Where a person who is entitled to redeem fails to do so within the time required, block would be manifestly unjust to an innocent mortgagee under a second mortgage on the entire block, subrogation would be refused.—Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Brunson, supra.

he cannot thereafter entitle himself to subrogation merely by advancing the redemption money to another who redeems.⁸¹ Where the proceeds of a mortgage loan are used to satisfy a final decree in foreclosure of a prior mortgage, the lender under the subsequent mortgage has been held to be entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the prior mortgage.⁸² A purchaser at a foreclosure sale or his vendee may, on the mortgagor's repudiation of the foreclosed mortgage on the ground that the land was homestead be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee of a prior mortgage which was refinanced by the proceeds of the foreclosed mortgage.⁸³

A junior mortgagee or judgment creditor, on redeeming from a prior mortgage, either before or after foreclosure thereof,⁸⁴ is usually held, where there are no intervening rights, to be entitled to subrogation to the rights of the prior mortgagee,⁸⁵ at least as far as is necessary for the protection of his own interests;⁸⁶ and the right extends also to his grantee to whom he conveys the property after redemption.⁸⁷ His redemption may, however, be a satisfaction and discharge of the mortgage if he so intends,⁸⁸ but the general rule allowing subrogation is so well established that it has been held that in order to have the effect of payment the redemption must be made in such unmistakable terms that there can be no doubt of the intent to extinguish and discharge the mortgage.⁸⁹ If the junior encumbrancer is entitled to be so subrogated, the right continues whether or not he thereafter

enforces his junior encumbrance;⁹⁰ nor is it lost by his acceptance of payment and satisfaction of his own mortgage at its maturity.⁹¹

b. Loan or Discharge under Agreement

- (1) In general
- (2) Agreement to take security discharged
- (3) Agreement to take new security

(1) In General

A person who advances money pursuant to an agreement that it shall be applied to the payment of an existing mortgage may be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.

The equities of the case may require that a person who advances money pursuant to an agreement that it shall be applied to the payment of an existing mortgage be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.⁹² A third person who discharges the obligation represented by a note secured by a trust deed, under an agreement whereby the mortgagor is to transfer the mortgaged property to him, is entitled to be subrogated to all the rights of the original holder of the note.⁹³

(2) Agreement to Take Security Discharged

Antenuptial agreement for protection of homestead

Where husband and wife before their marriage entered into an antenuptial agreement whereby the wife was to advance a certain sum to the husband to be applied to the payment of a mortgage on certain realty, in order to protect it as their homestead, and whereby the husband was to repay the money to the wife, administrator of wife's estate was entitled to invoke the right of subrogation against the husband, as against contention that wife in making advancement acted as a mere volunteer.—Tillotson v. Goodman, supra.

(3) Agreement to Take New Security

A third person who advances the means of discharging debts secured by deed or mortgage, under an agreement to take new security of equal rank with that discharged, is not a mere stranger or volunteer, and where he fails to obtain such security he is entitled to subrogation.

Where a third person advances the means of discharging a debt secured by a mortgage or deed of trust,⁷ or advances the means of discharging the mortgage or deed of trust,⁸ with the agreement or understanding that he shall have new security of equal rank with that discharged, he is not a mere stranger or volunteer. agreement that it would be used to discharge a mortgage securing a loan given on an agreement that it would be used to discharge a prior mortgage;¹⁷ nor can one who has advanced money to pay a lien note at the request of the debtor, taking a mortgage as security, be subrogated to the lien to the prejudice of a lien held by the creditor to secure other notes.¹⁸

A third person's right to be subrogated where he has advanced money to pay a debt secured by mortgage has been held not to be defeated by mere notice of an intervening lien,¹⁹ particularly where he, innocently and without negligence, believes that such lien is no longer a lien on the property in question.²⁰ A third person is not required to exercise the highest degree of care to discover intervening liens,²¹ but he will not be permitted to shut his eyes and ignore facts brought to his knowledge.²² Notice of intervening liens may, however, preclude subrogation,²³ especially where the entire debt secured by mortgage, as to which subrogation is sought, has not been discharged.²⁴ Subrogation will not be granted to the prejudice of persons who, without notice of the claim of the person seeking subrogation, have changed their position.²⁵

Under the rule that subrogation will not be granted to relieve a person of the consequences of his own unlawful act, considered supra § 6, a third person who, having advanced money to discharge a prior mortgage and having received a new mortgage as security, materially alters it, is not entitled to subrogation.²⁶

§ 40. — Maritime Lien

A third person who, at the request of the master, lends money for the discharge of a maritime lien is entitled to subrogation.

A third person who, at the request of the master, lends money for the discharge of maritime liens is not a volunteer,²⁷ and is entitled to be subrogated to the benefit of the liens so discharged.²⁸ So, where the master of a ship obtains money from another for purposes which are maritime in their character, and subsequently borrows money of libellant and repays the lender, libellant is entitled to a lien on the vessel, as standing in the same position as that in which the lender stood.²⁹ Further, one who advances checks to secure payment of a repair bill on a vessel is subrogated, when the checks are cashed by the repairman, to his lien to the extent that the checks are paid to the repairman in satisfaction of his bill.³⁰ On the other hand, the fact that a person lends securities for the general use of a shipowner, who gets them discounted and applies part of the proceeds in satisfaction of a bottomry on the ship, raises no equity in behalf of the lender to be subrogated to the lien of a bottomry creditor;³¹ and the same rule applies to a party advancing money to an owner of a steamer to pay for necessities, so that he is not legally subrogated to the privileges of the persons paid.³² A creditor

Lien for salvage. One who has advanced money to pay off a lien for salvage, under an agreement that he shall be subrogated to such lien, is entitled to payment from the proceeds of the sale of a vessel in admiralty in priority to claims based on prior personal judgments against the owners.³⁴

§ 41. — Mechanic's or Wage Lien

A person who advances money for the express purpose of discharging mechanics' liens, and it is so applied, is entitled to subrogation, as is a third person who makes such an advance under an agreement or understanding that he shall be subrogated.

Where a third person advances money for the express purpose that it be used to discharge mechanics' liens, and it is so applied, he is entitled to subrogation to the rights of the lienholders,³⁵ even though such liens have been canceled.³⁶ So, where a third person advances money to discharge liens of mechanics on an agreement or understanding for subrogation, he is entitled to be subrogated to their rights as against the contractor's surety.³⁷ Moreover, where such a loan is made in reliance on a mortgage which is defective or invalid, the lender is entitled to subrogation.³⁸ Mortgagees who lend money which is used to pay materialmen's and laborers' liens on property purchased by the mortgagor after he has contracted to convey to others may be entitled to be subrogated to his rights.³⁹ So, also, a third person who discharges a mechanic's lien on the understanding that he is to have a first lien on the property is entitled to subrogation where intervening encumbrances of which he was ignorant prevent his obtaining such first lien,⁴⁰ even though the mechanic's lien has been discharged of record.⁴¹

In the absence of an agreement or understanding for subrogation, a third person who advances money which is used to discharge claims of laborers or materialmen is not thereby entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the lienholders,⁴² including their rights under the contractor's bond,⁴³ or as to the fund retained under the contract.⁴⁴ An assignment given subsequent to payment for material does not entitle a third person furnishing money for such payment to be subrogated.⁴⁵ Where a third person takes a mortgage and lends money on condition that it be used to pay certain claims for labor and materials against the premises, and to obtain releases, and there is no evidence of an intention on the part of the mortgagee to keep the claims alive, he is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the holders of such claims as have been paid;⁴⁶ and, where the claims so discharged were not perfected liens, no right of subrogation exists.⁴⁷ Further, the lender of money used to discharge materialmen's liens cannot be subrogated to the rights of the lienholders as against a purchaser from the borrower under a contract requiring conveyance free from encumbrances, where such purchaser was without notice of the loan.⁴⁸

While it has been held that one not a mere volunteer, who, with an honest purpose to relieve the wage earner, and not for the purpose of personal gain, advances money in payment of wages earned is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the employee paid,⁴⁹ including the statutory right of preference,⁵⁰ and that a person who advances money to pay wages of those employed specially in an emergency for protection of public peace is entitled to subrogation,⁵¹ a third person who advances money to pay wages without any legal liability or contract to do so is a mere volunteer⁵² and is not entitled to subrogation.⁵³

Wages of seamen. One who advances wages to seamen in reliance on an order by the master in his favor, which order has been accepted by the company, has been held entitled to be substituted in the place of the seamen paid.⁵⁴

§ 42. — Vendor's Lien

A third person who at the instance of the debtor lends money which is used to pay a debt secured by a vendor's lien is entitled to subrogation; but the mere fact that borrowed money is used to discharge a vendor's lien does not entitle the lender to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor.

One who lends money to pay a debt secured by a vendor's lien at the instance of the debtor is not a volunteer or stranger⁵⁵ and if, when he makes the payment, he manifests an intention to keep the lien alive for his protection, he will be deemed in equity a purchaser of the encumbrance,⁵⁶ and will be subrogated to the lien he has discharged,⁵⁷ in the absence of culpable negligence,⁵⁸ and his right is superior to the dower right of the widow of the vendee⁵⁹ and to the rights of junior lienholders.⁶⁰

Release of notes; failure to assign lien

The subrogation of the assignee of original mortgages under trust deed, to rights of vendors whose liens were extinguished by the loan secured by the trust deed, was not defeated as defective merely because original purchase-money notes were released by holders and because the notes and liens were not assigned to the assignee.—*Glasscock v. Mortgage and notes unenforceable against realty

One who lent money to pastor of church for purchase of realty for church use had vendor's lien on realty by subrogation for unpaid balance of amount lent, plus accrued interest, even though notes and mortgage executed to lender by pastor as security for repayment of loan were unenforceable as against realty, to which pastor had no title.—*Lauderdale v. Moreover, mortgagees who lend money which is used to discharge a vendor's lien on property which is purchased by the mortgagor after he has contracted to convey to others may be entitled to be subrogated to his rights.⁶¹ A third person who advances money to take up and extend a debt secured by a vendor's lien under an agreement that such person shall stand in the place of the original holder of the indebtedness may be entitled to subrogation.⁶² So, also, where money is expressly advanced to extinguish a vendor's lien, with the just expectation on the part of the lender, of obtaining a valid security, but the security given is invalid or defective, the lender is entitled to be subrogated to the lien discharged.⁶³ Similarly, if payment of the vendor's lien is made under such circumstances as would operate as a fraud if the vendee should be permitted to insist that the security for the debt was discharged by the payment, he will be subrogated to the lien.⁶⁴

The mere fact that borrowed money is used to discharge a vendor's lien does not entitle the lender to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor.⁶⁵ One who lends money to be applied in payment of part of the purchase price of land, there being no agreement or understanding that he should be substituted to the lien of the vendor, or that he might in any way look to the land as equity for payment, is not entitled to the rights of the vendor;⁶⁶ and one who lends money to pay off a note given for the purchase money of land is not entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor, although the money so borrowed is used to pay off the lien.⁶⁷ A person furnishing money to take up some notes secured by a vendor's lien is not entitled to subrogation as against the payee of other notes secured by the same lien in the absence of an agreement for subrogation with such payee.⁶⁸ Where, following a loan to pay off one note secured by a vendor's lien, a person attempts to discharge another note secured by the same lien, but such tender is refused by the vendor, and the person attempting payment lends the money for such purpose, taking a mortgage as security, he is not entitled to share pro rata with the first lender.⁶⁹ One who lends money at the request of a vendee in order to discharge a vendor's lien cannot be subrogated to the lien discharged as against a purchaser from the vendee under a contract requiring conveyance free from encumbrances, where the purchaser is without knowledge of the loan.⁷⁰

In order to have a lender subrogated to the vendor's lien, there must be such a lien,⁷¹ and the lien must have been discharged out of the loan.⁷² Under the doctrine of part payment, considered supra § 10, a person whose money is used to discharge one of several vendor lien notes securing a debt is not thereby subrogated as against the creditor whose who has assumed a vendor's lien as part of the purchase price does not entitle the lender to subrogation.—Austin v. Pulschen, 42 P. 306, 110 Cal. 12, reheard 44 P. 788, 112 Cal. 528.

Promise to give security

The mere fact that the borrower promised to give the lender security in return for his loan which was to be applied to the payment of the purchase price of realty does not, on the borrower's refusal to do so, entitle the lender to subrogation.—Campan v. Molle, 57 P. 208, 124 Cal. 415.

Taking of security

A person advancing money to a purchaser of land, which is used in completing his payment of the purchase money, who at the time takes a deed of trust on the premises to secure himself, there being no privity or arrangement between him and the vendor that he shall succeed to the lien of the vendor, will not be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor, so as to hold the entire premises against a second purchaser from the first of a part of the land, debt is only partially paid.⁷³ A third person who advances the money to take up and extend a vendor's lien note at most becomes subrogated to the vendor's lien,⁷⁴ and does not acquire any superior title to the land.⁷⁵

Purchaser of vendor's lien notes, where purchase and not extinguishment of the debt is intended, is not a volunteer and is entitled to be subrogated to the vendor's lien.⁷⁶

§ 43. Third Person Making Advancements for Necessaries, or to Discharge Encumbrance on Property of Person Incompetent to Contract

A person who advances the means to obtain necessities for an incompetent person may be entitled, by subrogation, to a charge against his estate, and a person who advances the means to discharge an encumbrance on the property of an incompetent may be subrogated to the protection of the encumbrance.

A person who advances the means to obtain necessities for one incompetent to contract, such as an infant,⁷⁷ married woman,⁷⁸ or insane person,⁷⁹ is entitled, by subrogation, to a charge against the estate, and one who furnishes money and service in good faith for one for whose support land is charged is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the beneficiaries and has a lien on the land,⁸⁰ unless the contract for support is personal and limited as to place.⁸¹ Where a third person, not being bound therefor, voluntarily advances the means of discharging an encumbrance, relying on a void security no right of subrogation exists,⁸² and where no encumbrance exists, a mortgagee under a mortgage executed by the guardian of an incompetent person cannot claim subrogation on the theory that his money was used to discharge encumbrances.⁸³ A bona fide purchaser from a grantee of an insane grantor will not be entitled to subrogation by reason of the fact that the consideration for the conveyance was used for the support and maintenance of the incompetent grantor.⁸⁴

Surety

(1) Surety on insured's bonds, paid from proceeds of life policies naming surety as beneficiary, was subrogated to insurer's rights under trust deeds executed by insured as mortgagor.—Russell v. Owen, 165 S.E. 687, 203 N.C. 262.

(2) Subrogation of sureties generally see infra §§ 46-62.

Subrogation to rights of mortgagee

(1) Where mortgagee, having lien on insurance on debtor's life and also on realty, elected to take payment out of insurance money, administrator selling realty held proceeds subject to rights of insurance beneficiaries, under subrogation doctrine, to receive sum equal to amount of insurance money taken by mortgagee.—Barbin v. Moore, 159 A. 409, 85 N.H. 362, 83 A.L.R. 62.

(2) Where proceeds of fire insurance, taken out for the protection of a particular person, were used partially to satisfy a mortgage on the insured property, such person was entitled to be subrogated to mortgagee's rights to extent that funds were thus diverted.—*Taylor v. property attempted to be mortgaged.⁹⁴

If claimant's funds are not shown to have been used in the payment of a debt or encumbrance there is no right of subrogation;⁹⁵ subrogation will not be permitted to work an injustice against innocent persons;⁹⁶ nor is an individual entitled to be subrogated to rights of the state in its sovereign capacity.⁹⁷ So also a purchaser of property which turns out to be subject to a prior lien is not entitled to be subrogated to a mortgage lien on other property purchased by the vendor which lien the vendor paid off with the money obtained from the purchaser,⁹⁸ and a purchaser of a worthless note whose money was used to pay off another note is not subrogated to collateral securing the note paid off;⁹⁹ and it has been held that if a guardian uses his ward's money to pay off a vendor's lien on his own land the ward is not subrogated to the vendor's

Absence of prejudice

In suit by trustee of first trust to be subrogated to beneficiaries of second trust against one who as trustee for both trusts had misappropriated assets of first trust to replace misappropriated assets of second trust, and against surety of trustee as to second trust, subrogation would result in no injury to beneficiaries of second trust and hence would not be denied, where probate court had settled accounts of such trust and beneficiaries took no appeal.—*Hill v. Money used for improvements and taxes

Where mortgagee lent money on real estate for purpose of discharging valid encumbrances and for placing valuable improvements on property, and fund was so used, but mortgagor's title failed, lender was entitled to subrogation to the rights of mortgagor in possession under occupying claimants statute, with respect to lasting and valuable improvements and taxes paid, to extent money lent had been spent on improvements and taxes.—*United Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n of Tulsa v. Fact that proceeds received by compensation claimant were used by him to pay mortgage indebtedness of himself and wife on property owned by them jointly did not entitle attorneys who represented claimant in the proceedings to be subrogated to the mortgage by reason of fact that fund which they assisted in creating was used in paying the mortgage indebtedness, since attorneys had no lien on compensation received by claimant.—*Terry v. lien discharged.¹ Where the surety of a contractor was secured by an assignment of the money to become due under the contract and by a mortgage on the contractor's homestead, a partner of the contractor who garnished a sum due on the contract, sued for an accounting, and obtained judgment was not entitled to be subrogated to the mortgage security where, after the surety had been paid from the sum due on the contract, the balance left was insufficient to pay the partner's judgment.² Where partners agree that partnership assets shall be transferred to a bank to satisfy the debts of individual partners, general creditors of the partnership are not entitled to be subrogated to a partner's right to have partnership assets appropriated to partnership indebtedness.³ Where a payee, to whom a note has been intrusted for a special purpose by the makers, wrongfully alters the note and pledges it to secure a loan for his own purposes plaintiff, whose funds the payee takes without authority to repay the loan, will not be subrogated to the rights of the pledgee,⁴ nor will he be subrogated to the rights of a holder in due course against the maker, on the theory of an implied agreement by the payee that on use of the funds to pay his debt he should be subrogated to the rights of the holder in due course as against him.⁵

Contract as controlling right to subrogation. The terms of a contract under which the funds or property of one person are used to pay the debts of another will control the right to subrogation and the extent thereof.⁶

§ 45. Persons Making Improvements on Land of Another

A person making improvements on the land of another under an honest belief that he is the owner may be subrogated to the extent of such improvements, particularly where the person making the improvements is not a mere stranger.

Where a person has materially improved land under the belief, honestly entertained with reasonable grounds, that he is the owner of the land, and the aid of a court of equity is sought by the true owner to enforce his title, it will be granted only on condition that such innocent person shall be compensated to the extent of the benefit which he has conferred on the owner; and this right may be enforced by subrogation.⁷ The same rule applies where a senior creditor enforces a lien or charge against the land.⁸ The rule particularly applies where the one making improvements on the land of another was not a mere stranger or intermeddler, but was under a duty to do so.⁹ A third person whose property has been used to make improvements on land at the request of the purchaser under an executory contract to purchase may forfeit any right to be subrogated to the rights of the purchaser by failing to tender payment of delinquent installments.¹⁰ Materialmen furnishing materials to a lessee are not entitled to exercise the lessee's privilege of paying rent due under a lease providing for forfeiture for nonpayment of rent.¹¹

B. SURETIES OR GUARANTORS

§ 46. In General

The doctrine of subrogation applies on behalf of a surety who has been compelled to pay the debt of his principal.

The doctrine of subrogation is universally applied on behalf of a surety who has been compelled to pay the debt of his principal.¹² A surety is a special kind of secured creditor, since his claim against the principal is secured by his right of subrogation to the remedies of the creditor which he has been compelled to pay,¹³ and on insolvency of the principal he may retain for his protection, even

The law of the state in which contracts were made and other papers relating to a loan and guaranty were executed governs in determining the guarantor's right of subrogation, rather than the law of the state in which some of the notes given for the loan were made payable.¹⁶

c. Time of accrual

a. In General

A surety or guarantor, by payment of the debt of his principal at a time when he is obliged to make payment, acquires an immediate right to be subrogated, to the extent necessary to obtain reimbursement or contribution, to all rights, remedies, and securities which were available to the creditor to obtain payment from the person or property of any person who, as to the surety, is primarily liable for the debt.

Held not surety entitled to subrogation

Ill.—Nelson v. John B. Colegrove & Co. State Bank, 268 Ill.App. 56, affirmed 188 N.E. 461, 354 Ill. 408.

Assertion by surety

Claim of surety on depository bond of bank in which trustee deposited funds of bankrupt estate to be subrogated to rights of trustee against bank must be asserted by surety and not by trustee.—Shertzer v. Williams, 168 So. 573, 232 Ala. 558.

Cosureties

Where cosureties paid judgment and took assignment thereof and subsequently principal received bequest of money insufficient to pay entire judgment, such cosureties were each entitled to recover half of such amount.—Hunt v. Starks, 75 S.W.2d 787, 256 Ky. 120.

Surety for insolvent debtor

(1) A subrogated surety to the extent of the amount of his payment should be clothed with all of the creditor's rights and remedies as they stood at the time of the debtor's insolvency.—American Sur. Co. of New York v. Bethlehem Nat. Bank of Bethlehem, D.C.Pa., 33 F.Supp. 722, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 116 F.2d 75, reversed on other grounds 62 S.Ct. 226, 314 U.S. 314, 86 L.Ed. 241, 138 A.L.R. 509.

(2) Since a creditor may file for amount of his entire claim against insolvent as it stood at inception of receivership, insolvent's surety who has paid claim in whole or in part and who is, therefore, subrogated to creditor's right to dividends from principal's insolvent estate is likewise entitled to such dividends, calculated, not on basis of what surety paid, but on amount of original claim, creditor in such case claiming and proving as trustee pro tanto for surety.—Commonwealth ex rel. Schnader v. National Sur. Co., 37 A.2d 753, 349 Pa. 599.

Stipulation held not to prejudice right

A surety's right to subrogation to creditor's rights is not prejudiced by stipulation between creditor and principal that perishable property shall be sold and proceeds placed in trust to await decision in a suit to be brought against surety, where, after its commencement, the trustee is made a party and trust fund is subject to court's order.—*Omaha Grain Exch. v. to have been considered as excluding subrogation of guarantors.²¹ The general rule applies in favor of a surety who is wife of the principal as well as to any other surety.²²

b. Compensated or Hired Sureties

Paid or compensated sureties are entitled to the benefits of the doctrine of subrogation to the same extent as occasional and gratuitous sureties, although the fact that the surety has been paid for assuming the risk may be considered in balancing the equities.

Paid or compensated sureties, engaged in suretyship as a business enterprise, are entitled to the benefits of the doctrine of subrogation to the same extent as occasional and gratuitous sureties;²³ but the fact that the surety has been paid for assuming the risk may be considered in balancing the equities,²⁴ and seems to have been a material underlying factor which has caused some courts to refuse subrogation where the rights of innocent third persons are likely to suffer if subrogation is granted,²⁵ as where liability exists by virtue of a harsh common-law rule, and its application is sought by a surety who has been paid to protect against such a loss.²⁶

c. Time of Accrual

For the purpose of determining the right to which the surety can be subrogated, his right is not regarded as accruing until the time of payment, but, for the purpose of determining the superiority of his rights over those of the principal or creditor and those claiming under them, the surety's equity is regarded as relating back to, or having its inception at, the time when the contract of suretyship is entered into.

As discussed infra § 48 a (1), a surety must generally have paid the debt before he can proceed to enforce a right of subrogation, and apparently for the purpose of determining the rights to which the surety can be subrogated his right is not regarded as accruing until the time of payment;²⁷ but, at holders, and fact that payments by company had not been made until after title was taken did not preclude subrogation of subsidiary where payments were made as part of plan to acquire property.—Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Liberdar Holding Corp., C.C.A.N.Y., 85 F.2d 504.

Surety as creditor of principal from date of payment or from date of least, for the purpose of determining the superiority of the surety's rights over those of the principal, or creditor, and those claiming under them, a surety's equity, or potential right to subrogation, is generally regarded, either as relating back to, or having its inception at, the time when the contract of suretyship is entered into.²⁸ The purpose of this doctrine of relation back is simply to do justice to the surety, and it will not be applied to give the surety rights the creditor never possessed,²⁹ or so as to result in injustice to third persons.³⁰

a. Payment

- (1) In general
- (2) Necessity that payment be under compulsion
- (3) Part payment

(1) In General

Generally a surety or guarantor is not entitled to be subrogated to the securities and rights of the creditor until he has paid, or at least secured the payment of, the debt for which he is surety.

While equity, to avoid circuity of action and a multiplicity of suits, will often render a decree to protect the surety's right of subrogation, even before he has paid the debt,³¹ the rule, as generally stated, is that a surety or guarantor is not entitled to be subrogated to the securities and rights of the creditor until he has paid the debt for which he is surety,³² or, at least, it has been held, until

Right to have securities and other property of principal first applied see Principal and Surety § 288 b.

Acquiescence of creditors

Bank, sued as party to principal's misappropriation, may not complain that surety, suing on theory of subrogation to rights of creditors, has not paid the creditors, where the latter are in court acquiescing, and all parties are protected by decree.—American Surety Co. v. Grace, 271 S.W. 739, 151 Tenn. 575.

All parties before court

Guardian's surety was entitled to decree subrogating him to rights of ward against bank which knowingly misapplied proceeds of ward's estate, on surety's payment to ward of amount misapplied although surety had not yet paid such amount, where all parties were before court and liability to ward of both surety and bank had been established.—Goodwin v. American Sur. Co. of New York, 68 P.2d 619, 190 Wash. 457.

Lincoln Bank & Trust Co., D.C.Ky., 18 F.Supp. 375, re-

he has secured the payment of the debt.³³ Payment must be of the particular debt in connection with which the right to which subrogation is claimed exists,³⁴ and must be made on the debt of the principal for which the surety was bound, and not in discharge of some debt which is primarily the surety's own.³⁵

Manner and medium of payment. It is immaterial in what way a surety satisfied the debt provided he was discharged from liability to his creditor,³⁶ and it is not necessary that the surety must sustain some personal loss.³⁷ It is not essential that payment be in money; whatever the creditor accepts in satisfaction will operate as payment.³⁸ Where a surety furnished money to his principal, to be applied on the debt of the principal, and the money was thus applied by the principal, the surety is as fully entitled to be subrogated to any securities held by the creditor as if he had paid the debt in person;³⁹ and, where the principal paid the debt by the proceeds of a crop in which the surety had a part interest, the surety must be regarded as having paid the debt to the extent that his part of the proceeds were used in the extinguishment of the debt.⁴⁰

(2) Necessity That Payment Be under Compulsion

A surety who voluntarily pays a debt for which he is not legally liable is not entitled to subrogation, but it is not essential that the surety wait until after the suit and judgment.

Although one who pays a debt under the mistaken belief that he is bound as surety will be entitled to subrogation,⁴¹ a surety who voluntarily pays a debt for which he is not legally liable is not entitled to subrogation, since he occupies no better position than a stranger or volunteer.⁴² Payment is, of course, involuntary and entitles the surety to subrogation where it comes as the result of legal proceedings against him;⁴³ but it is not essential that the surety wait until after the suit and judgment,⁴⁴ since, as soon as he becomes chargeable for performance by the principal, he may immediately discharge the obligation and become by subrogation entitled to all the remedies possessed by the creditor,⁴⁵ and the surety may even be entitled to subrogation, by reason of payment made before maturity,⁴⁶ but in such case his right thereto is not enforceable until the debt has matured.⁴⁷

While one who has made payment officiously is not entitled to subrogation,⁴⁸ a surety is not officious where he was under duty to make the payment.⁴⁹

Payment after levy on sufficient of principal's property. The levy of execution on sufficient property of the principal to pay the judgment does not divest a surety of the judgment debtor of all interest in the judgment, so as to render his subsequent payment of the judgment a voluntary payment, and to deprive him of all recourse against the sheriff for the latter's wrongful release of the levy.⁵⁰

Payment after running of limitations in favor of surety. If the surety pays the debt after it is barred as to him by the statute of limitations, he is a volunteer, and not entitled to subrogation.⁵¹

(3) Part Payment

In order that the surety may have subrogation, the debt must be fully paid, and, although the surety has paid the entire amount for which he is liable, he is not entitled to be subrogated to securities or rights which are held to enforce payment of other sums which remain unpaid; but this does not mean that the surety must pay the whole debt for which he became surety, it being sufficient if the surety has paid part and the balance has been otherwise satisfied.

To prevent impairment of the creditor's superior right to the possession and benefit of all securities and rights attaching to the debt until it is paid in full, it is generally held that, in order that the surety may have subrogation, the debt must be fully paid;⁵² and, although the surety has paid the entire

Guaranty of stock dividends

(1) One who guaranteed to holders of corporation's preferred stock the payment of dividends and redemption of principal was not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of holders of stock so redeemed until the entire balance of preferred stock outstanding had been redeemed, or in some manner satisfied, although he had been released from further performance of his guaranty, and whether or not his guaranty applied only to the shares retired, or to the entire outstanding issue.—Ellis v. Thompson, 8 N.E.2d 430, 104 Ind.App. 492.

(2) Where, after partial perform-must pay the whole debt for which he became surety,⁵⁴ since the essence of the rule is simply that the creditor must be fully paid,⁵⁵ and in general it is sufficient if the balance of the creditor's debt has been otherwise satisfied.⁵⁶ Although the surety does not pay the full amount of the debt, he will be subrogated to all the benefits which the creditor had against the principal to the extent of his payment if he pays a part of the debt and the balance is paid by the principal⁵⁷ or some other person,⁵⁸ or, it has been held, if he pays a sum by way of compromise which the creditor agrees to take in satisfaction of the debt.⁵⁹ Moreover, the failure of the surety to pay the full penal sum of his undertaking does not deprive him of the right of subrogation if the debt has been fully paid.⁶⁰

It is only as between creditor and surety that the latter has no right on partial payment of the debt to come in and share the securities with the creditor.⁶¹ Only a creditor holding the securities can object to a subrogation pro tanto of a surety who has paid a portion of the debt, whether the surety has entirely satisfied the debt or not,⁶² and the creditor may allow the surety to be subrogated before the indebtedness is wholly extinguished.⁶³

Contractual provision for pro tanto subrogation. Subrogation reducing statutory liability on bond

Any right of subrogation provided in statutory bond securing municipal bank deposit which has effect of reducing surety's statutory obligation is void, and surety's right to subrogation on payment of principal sum of bond to obligee must be determined by general rules of equity.—City of Findlay v. American Surety Co. of New York, 198 N.E. 591, 50 Ohio App. 429.

Agreement to subrogate held without consideration

Where surety on official bond of county tax collector paid only face amount of bond to state on discovery of defalcations by collector in excess of face amount of the bond, an agreement and receipt executed by state's attorney general purporting to subrogate surety to any of state's rights to recover defalcations was without consideration.—National Surety Corp. v. before a contract will be construed to authorize a pro tanto subrogation in favor of a surety which will be to the detriment of the creditor, the contract should be so certain as to admit of no doubt on that question.⁶⁷

Payment of installment. It has been held that, where subrogation will enable a surety to recover installments which he paid after the principal refused to pay, and will not affect or disturb any securities held by the creditor, it will be granted without compelling him to wait for all the installments to fall due.⁶⁸

b. Specific Agreement for, or Acceptance of, Rights

A special agreement for subrogation of the surety is unnecessary; nor need the surety signify his election and acceptance of such right at the time of the payment.

The right to subrogation arises simply because of the suretyship and the payment of the debt by the surety, and a specific or special agreement for subrogation is unnecessary;⁶⁹ nor need the surety signify his election and acceptance of such right at the time of payment.⁷⁰ Indeed it is immaterial that, at the time of payment, there is no knowledge of the equitable right to be subrogated as long as there is an intent to retain all general rights in the premises;⁷¹ and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, equity will presume that the surety has made payment with the intention of keeping the rights of the creditor afoot for his benefit;⁷² but, if it is shown that the surety's payment was made as a gift, with an intent to relieve the principal's property from encumbrance, there can be no subrogation.⁷³

c. Contract with, or Request from, Principal

The right to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the principal is not dependent on the principal's having requested or contracted with the surety or guarantor to enter into the undertaking.

The right to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the principal debtor is not dependent on the latter's having requested or contracted with the surety or guarantor to enter into his undertaking;⁷⁴ and a surety or guarantor is entitled to be subrogated to the creditor's rights against the principal although he has become bound at the request of the creditor alone,⁷⁵ or at the request of one who has a property interest to protect by payment of the debt and who would be entitled to subrogation had he paid the debt,⁷⁶ even though the principal has no notice of the relationship existing between the subrogee and the creditor.⁷⁷ Where there was no express or implied request by the debtor, however, and where he received no benefit from the filing of a bond, and it was not intended that he should, and the person paying the debt has failed to establish a superior equity, the payment was that of a volunteer not entitled to subrogation.⁷⁸

d. Other Matters

Various matters, such as the exhaustion of legal remedies against the principal, usefulness or valuelessness of the right, and indenticalness in undertakings of principal and surety, have been held not essential to the creation or existence of the right of a surety to subrogation.

Various matters have been held not essential to the creation or existence of the right of a surety to subrogation.⁷⁹ Thus, a surety may, as a general rule, be subrogated to, and enforce, the rights and remedies of the creditor, although he has not exhausted his legal remedies against the principal.⁸⁰ Moreover, subrogation to a personal right against the principal will not be refused because, at the time, subrogation seems entirely useless due to the insolvency of the principal, since the latter's situation may improve and complete reimbursement eventually be afforded by way of subrogation;⁸¹ but subroga-

tion to a right, which is of no practical advantage to the surety and which is not necessary for his protection, will be refused where other rights are involved which would make it inequitable to grant subrogation.⁸²

Identicalness in undertakings of principal and surety. It is not essential to the right of subrogation that the surety or guarantor become bound by the same instrument, and at the same time, as the principal,⁸³ and it is immaterial that the principal has failed to affix his signature to the bond on which the surety has become bound.⁸⁴

§ 49. — Right of Subrogation as Dependent on, or Affected by, Acts of Creditor in General

- a. Release or discharge of rights after payment by surety
- b. Dealings subsequent to suretyship but before payment

a. Release or Discharge of Rights after Payment by Surety

The fact that the creditor, after payment by the surety, cancels and surrenders a security without any stipulation that it shall be kept alive, or wrongfully proceeds to enter a satisfaction or discharge of record, will not defeat the surety's right to be subrogated.

The fact that the creditor, after payment by the surety, cancels and surrenders a security without any stipulation that it shall be kept alive,⁸⁵ or wrongfully proceeds to enter a satisfaction or discharge of record,⁸⁶ will not defeat the surety's right to be subrogated and enforce the right as against the principal,⁸⁷ or anyone in his shoes who has not taken in reliance on the apparent discharge.⁸⁸ The

surety will be subrogated in priority to a second lien, which the creditor holds for a debt on which the surety is not bound, where the creditor makes the release or discharge of the first lien securing the debt on which the surety is bound with the expectation of gaining priority for the second lien,⁸⁹ and this seems to be true, although the creditor is ignorant of the suretyship at the time he compels payment from the surety.⁹⁰ An invalid attempt by the creditor to sell pledged property to himself without adequate notice after payment of the debt by the surety will not defeat the surety's right to be subrogated to the pledge.⁹¹

Where securities are originally given, when the surety becomes bound, to secure only the debt for which the surety is obligated, the creditor cannot defeat the surety's right to be subrogated to the security on payment of only the debt for which he is bound by adding other debts for which the surety is not bound and having them secured by the same property; and if two distinct debts secured by a first and second mortgage on the debtor's property are purchased by the same person, a surety for the first debt may be subrogated to the first mortgage on payment of that debt alone.

Where securities are originally given, at the time the debt is contracted and the surety becomes bound, to secure only the debt for which the surety is obligated, the creditor cannot, by adding other debts for which the surety is not bound and having them secured by the same property, defeat the surety's right to be subrogated to the security on payment of only the debt for which he is bound.⁹² If two independent and distinct debts, secured by a first and second mortgage on the property of the debtor, are subsequently purchased by the same person, a surety for the first debt is entitled to be subrogated to the first mortgage on payment of that debt alone;⁹³ and, if a debt secured by a surety and a mortgage is subsequently transferred to one who has previously purchased the fee of the mortgaged premises, the surety, on payment of the debt, is entitled to be subrogated to the mortgage and enforce it against the premises to the same extent as if the fee were owned by someone other than the creditor.⁹⁴

Where, before payment has been made by the surety, the creditor fraudulently releases a security, on the property of the principal, for a nominal consideration, to one who has taken the property from the principal for an inadequate consideration and in collusion with the creditor, and the fact of the release is concealed from the surety until after payment, he will be subrogated to the security and may enforce it against the purchaser.⁹⁵

§ 50. — Assignment by Creditor

While the creditor may properly make an assignment of his rights and remedies to the surety where the surety is entitled to be subrogated, the completion of the surety's subrogation is not dependent on a formal assignment or transfer; and, if the surety is not entitled to subrogation, an assignment will not give the surety a right of subrogation he would not otherwise have.

Prosecution of assigned claim

The successful prosecution of suit by surety on bond of company contracting with Veterans' Administration to erect hospital for injunction against payment of check, issued by federal treasury to contractor on administration's final warrant, did not affect surety's power to prosecute claims assigned to it by subcontractors on its payment thereof.—U. S. ex rel. Johnson v. Morley Const. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 98 F.2d 781, certiorari denied Maryland Cas. Co. v. U. S., for Use and Benefit of Harrington, 59 S.Ct. 244, 305 U.S. 651, 83 L.Ed. 421.

Who may question transfer

Where decree obtained by town against town collector's sureties, which was satisfied of record by payment from sureties, expressly transferred by subrogation to sureties the cause of action against bank alleged to have aided collector's defalcation, the town alone could question that transfer.—State Bank & Trust Co. v. Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, 21 N.E.2d 157, 300 Ill.App. 435.

subrogation,⁹⁷ the completion of the surety's subrogation and his right to pursue the rights and remedies of the creditor are not dependent on the willingness of the latter to make an assignment, since in equity the surety's payment causes an assignment by operation of law and no formal assignment or transfer is necessary.⁹⁸ On the other hand, it seems that, if the surety is not entitled to subrogation, an assignment by the creditor will be ineffectual to give the surety a right of subrogation he would not otherwise have;⁹⁹ his rights must be measured by the application of equitable principles in the first instance, his recovery being dependent on a right in equity, and not by virtue of an asserted legal right under an assignment.¹

cipal may be transferred by the judgment creditor to the surety who satisfied the judgment,² and, in a majority of states where a surety, on paying the judgment, takes an assignment thereof either to himself or to a third person, he may enforce the judgment against his principal,³ but, according to some decisions, the assignment must be made to a third person, an assignment to the surety himself extinguishing the original obligation.⁴ An assignment to the surety, it is held, is subordinate to the rights of subrogation,⁵ and the right of the surety to pursue the assigned judgment depends on subrogation rather than on the assignment.⁶ Indeed, it is held that no actual assignment is necessary; the surety is considered on equitable principles as entitled to an assignment, and equity will consider as done that which should have been done, and, if neces-

Protection of surety's interests by assignment

(1) With respect to assignment of judgment to surety, a surety always has a right to protect his interests when called on to pay debt on which he was not primarily liable.—Bogden v. Milauckas, 40 N.E.2d 91, 313 Ill. App. 311.

(2) This he may do by having the judgment assigned to a third person and kept alive for his benefit.—Katz v. Moessinger, 110 Ill. 372—34 C.J. p 691 notes 73, 74.

(3) If intention was not to extinguish judgment against principal and surety, surety so paying judgment is entitled to assignment of such judgment, with all rights and liens which attach to it in the creditor's hands.—In re Phillips' Estate, 211 S.W.2d 728, 357 Mo. 947—Schuchman v. Roberts, 133 S.W.2d 1030, 234 Mo.App. 509.

(4) Where intent is to preserve judgment in favor of a surety as against principal debtor, the taking of an assignment of judgment by surety is conclusive evidence of intent of parties to keep the judgment alive and in force for benefit of assignee.—Bogden v. Milauckas, 40 N. E.2d 91, 313 Ill.App. 311.

sary for his protection, will decree an assignment to be made.⁷ Statutes authorizing a surety who has paid a judgment to obtain an assignment thereof from the creditor and proceed summarily by judgment or by action at law against the principal do not restrict the equitable doctrine of subrogation.⁸ Where one of several sureties pays the judgment, the taking of an assignment of the judgment to himself does not satisfy it against the other judgment debtors.⁹

§ 51. — Waiver by Surety

A surety may waive his rights as subrogee by express agreement or by implication.

The right to subrogation can be availed of only by a surety alert in discharging his duty,¹⁰ and not guilty of inequitable conduct.¹¹ The right of a surety who pays the principal's debt to be substituted to the creditor's rights is optional, to be waived or enforced as the surety may elect.¹² Not being a matter of contract it may be waived or discharged without consideration,¹³ and once waived it is gone.¹⁴

A surety may waive his rights as subrogee by express agreement,¹⁵ or by implication by the doing of an act inconsistent with the enforcement of such rights,¹⁶ as, it seems, by taking inconsistent independent rights or securities as a means of obtaining reimbursement.¹⁷ The act relied on as a waiver must actually be inconsistent with the enforcement of the creditor's rights by way of subrogation, however,¹⁸ and the fact that indemnity is taken from the principal at the time the contract of suretyship is entered into will not prevent the surety from subsequently asserting subrogation to the creditor's rights where there is nothing to show that such indemnity was intended to provide an exclusive remedy for the surety.¹⁹ The fact that the surety in a prior action unsuccessfully attacked as fraudulent a deed of trust made by the principal to secure his creditors does not preclude him from asserting his right to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor under the deed of trust.²⁰

Reason for rule

"He sought no right of subrogation in that case to the rights of Mrs. Settle [a secured creditor] under the deed of trust. No such question was involved, and none such was adjudged or could have been . . . He now comes on an entirely different state of facts to assert a right claimed in a definite form on an independent equity, no way involved or brought before the court then for adjudication, consequently not affected by that decree . . . He . . . comes in on the footing of a right asserted and maintained and now owned by Mrs. Settle, to which he seeks to be subrogated. He is to stand in her shoes, take her place, if he succeeds in his present contention, so that if the right is a good one, other things out of the way, he occupies her place, and is entitled to have it enforced for his benefit to the same extent that she could have done."—Motley v. Harris, supra.

§ 52. — Extent and Limitations of Subrogation Generally

A surety has a right to be made whole when he fulfills his obligation under a contract of suretyship, but can acquire, by way of subrogation, no greater rights than were possessed by the creditor.

A surety has a right to be made whole when he fulfills his obligation under a contract of suretyship,²¹ and this includes interest on the money expended by him in fulfilling his obligations until repaid,²² but not interest and attorney's fees which he was compelled to pay to the creditor because of his own fault in compelling the creditor to sue instead of paying the amount clearly owed without suit.²³

A surety can acquire, by way of subrogation, no greater rights than were possessed by the creditor²⁴

Set-off held improper

In action by surety on fidelity bonds issued to an insurer to recover as insurer's subrogee on a bank's indorsement of drafts issued by insurer in payment of fraudulent accident claims presented by adjuster on ground that payees' indorsements were forged, amount which surety recovered against adjuster in legal proceedings based on his fraudulent transactions was not required to be set off against any judgment recovered by surety against bank where the only reasonable conclusion was that moneys recovered from adjuster in those proceedings were not identical moneys that he received as a result of his fraudulent transactions.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Costs incurred in defending former action

In action to recover tax penalties from taxpayers by surety of county treasurer, who paid tax penalties accruing because of treasurer's delay in depositing checks received in payment of taxes and who by virtue of payment was subrogated to rights of county, recovery was strictly limited to amount of penalties paid by surety, with interest, and could not include costs incurred in defense of former action of county against sure-

The right of subrogation is derivative, comes solely from the assured, and can only be enforced in his right.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Town of Islip, 48 N.Y.S.2d 749, 268 App.Div. 92.

Rights of creditor considered in action by surety

In action by board of county commissioners and surety on county treasurer's bond against bank for conversion of county sinking fund securities, where petition pleaded cause of action against bank in favor of surety on principle of subrogation, but did not state cause of action against bank in favor of county, county could not recover in action, but rights which county might have against bank would be considered in order properly to apply the principle of subrogation.—Fourth Nat. Bank v. Board of Com'rs of Craig County, 95 P.2d 878, 186 Okl. 102.

Interest on deposit

Where state, although entitled to a preference, could not recover interest on deposit for period following insolvency of depository bank, either from liquidating agent of bank or corporation which purchased assets of bank under agreement to pay in full all claims entitled to priority, there being no contract calling for payment of interest on state's deposit, surety on depository bond who paid state amount of deposit, and thereby was subrogated to state's rights, was not entitled to such interest.—Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Luther Williams Bank & Trust Co., 181 S.E. 201, 51 Ga.App. 633.

Guarantor of dividends on corporate preferred stock, having paid in accordance with guaranty and taken assignments of the payee stockholders' rights to dividends thereafter declared for the period covered by such payments, did not have a valid subsisting claim against the corporation but only a right to reimbursement out of contingent future profits, and, until a dividend should be declared, guarantor had no evidence of indebtedness but merely a right to a proportionate share of the earned profits when and if they might accrue and at the time of the payment which effected the subrogation;²⁵ and one who acquires or succeeds to rights, claims, or securities through subrogation takes them burdened with the limitations and disqualifications to which they were subject in the hands of the person for whom he is substituted.²⁶ Thus, although the asserted right originally existed in favor of the creditor, there usually can be no subrogation to it if it has been released or extinguished before payment by the surety, since subrogation is generally limited to such rights as exist at the date of payment.²⁷ Furthermore, a surety will be subrogated only to such rights and securities as are held by the creditor with respect to the particular debt or contract for which the surety is bound;²⁸ and, unless there is an agreement causing the result to be otherwise,²⁹ sureties on an obligation given to procure a loan with which to discharge another debt or encumbrance cannot be subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose debt or encumbrance is discharged, but only to the rights of the lender or the creditor in the debt for which they are bound.³⁰ Where a lien or security is originally given to secure the debt for which the surety is bound, and also other debts due the same creditor for which the surety is not bound, unless there is an agreement specifically requiring that the collateral first be applied to the debt for which the surety is bound,³¹ the surety will not be subrogated to the creditor's prejudice if the collateral is needed to satisfy the debts for which the surety is not bound;³² nor can a surety be subrogated to collateral which the creditor has exhausted in application on the debt to the benefit of the surety.³³

Subrogation is limited to indemnification or reimbursement, and a surety will be subrogated to, and can enforce, the rights of the creditor only to the extent necessary to obtain reimbursement for the amount which the surety has actually paid.³⁴ If

be ordered distributed.—Mid-West Rubber Reclaiming Co. v. C. I. R., C. C.A.7, 181 F.2d 157.

Remedies nonexistent at time of payment

The statute relieving public officers from liability for loss of funds deposited in insolvent banks, and providing for payment of claims by governmental unit, is remedial and does not create new rights as far as claimants and subrogation rights of officer's surety are concerned, and did not give officers' sureties subrogation rights against county for money paid before enactment of statute to discharge circuit court clerk's liability.—*Commercial Cas. Satisfaction of judgment for less than amount thereof

A surety, who satisfied judgment obtained on surety bond for an amount less than judgment and obtained assignment of judgment, stood in position of judgment creditor except that surety's recovery by execution on judgment was limited to amount paid by surety with interest

a surety has been fully reimbursed he will not be subrogated.³⁵ As against a cosurety the paying surety will be subrogated only in the amount which the cosurety is equitably bound to contribute.³⁶

Recovery on instrument evidencing debt. A surety on a bill or note, who brings suit on the instrument with respect to which he has been subrogated to the creditor's rights, may recover attorneys' fees provided for in the instrument,³⁷ although the surety has paid the debt without suit so that he has not been compelled to pay attorneys' fees to the creditor;³⁸ and he is entitled to the benefit of a provision for the waiver of certain procedure by the maker.³⁹ According to some cases the surety can recover the rate of interest stipulated in the note on the amount he has been compelled to pay;⁴⁰ but there is authority for limiting the surety's recovery to legal interest only if the amount stipulated in the instrument is higher.⁴¹

§ 53. — Assignment and Transfer of Surety's Rights

Rights which a surety has acquired by way of subrogation are assignable by him, and may pass to his personal representatives or to lien creditors or transferees of the surety's property.

Rights which a surety has acquired by way of subrogation are assignable by him;⁴² and they may pass to his personal representatives,⁴³ or to his lien creditors whose rights are affected by the enforcement of the debt against the property of the surety,⁴⁴ or to a transferee of the surety's property who, in order to prevent it from being taken in satisfaction of the debt, is compelled to pay such debt.⁴⁵

- a. In general
- b. Debt itself and evidences and incidents thereof
- c. Collateral securities generally
- d. Rights and remedies given by law or obtained by legal proceedings
- e. Rights and remedies against third persons

a. In General

A surety's right to be subrogated to all rights and remedies of the creditor is not limited to judgments. It is available in the distribution of funds in control of the court, and includes rights and remedies of which the surety was ignorant at the time he entered into the contract of suretyship as well as rights acquired by the creditor subsequent to such time, and rights acquired under or arising out of the contract secured.

Rights acquired under or arising out of contract secured. A surety, bound for the performance of a contract, who has been compelled to make good the defaults of his principal, will in general be subrogated to all rights which the creditor has under the terms of the contract⁵⁰ or has acquired by virtue thereof.⁵¹

b. Debt Itself and Evidences and Incidents Thereof

The rule widely accepted in America is that the surety's payment of the debt is regarded in equity as a purchase by the surety, and operates as an equitable assignment to him of the debt and all its evidences and incidents, so that he may enforce it to the extent necessary to obtain reimbursement from the principal and contribution from a cosurety.

It is the widely accepted American rule that, no matter what the effect of payment at law, it is, in equity, by virtue of the doctrine of subrogation, to be regarded as a purchase by the surety, and operating as an equitable assignment to him of the debt and all its evidences and incidents, so that he may enforce it to the extent necessary to obtain reimbursement from the principal,⁵² or contribution from a cosurety,⁵³ although the English rule, refusing subrogation to the debt and dependent rights extinguished at law by payment, has apparently been followed in some jurisdictions, in this country,⁵⁴ and has created difficulties in a number of American states.⁵⁵

c. Collateral Securities Generally

A surety will be subrogated to any collateral security which has been given the creditor by the principal or a cosurety to secure payment of the debt for which the surety is bound.

A surety will, in general, be subrogated to any collateral security which has been given the creditor by the principal,⁵⁶ or which has been given the creditor by a cosurety,⁵⁷ to secure payment of the debt for which the surety is bound.

Vendors' liens. A surety for the purchase price of land will be subrogated to an express vendor's lien reserved in the deed to the vendee,⁵⁸ or to a vendor's lien existing because of the retention of legal title until the entire contract price has been paid.⁵⁹ While there are a number of cases which might seem to suggest that a surety will be subrogated even to an implied vendor's lien given to a vendor who has parted with legal title,⁶⁰ it has been held that, since the taking of a surety for the purchase money operates as a waiver or extinguishment of such a lien in favor of the vendor, the surety cannot thereafter acquire such a lien by way of subrogation;⁶¹ and in some of the jurisdictions which once followed the rule that payment by a surety is an extinguishment so that he cannot be subrogated to the debt itself, or incidents depending thereon, as discussed supra subdivision b of this section, it seems to have been held that an implied vendor's or grantor's lien is an incident extinguished by payment, to which a surety is not entitled to be subrogated.⁶²

Collateral given by third persons. It has been said that a surety will not be subrogated to collateral security or indemnity which has been furnished the creditor by a third person or stranger,⁶³ but a surety will be subrogated to the creditor's rights against means of payment provided by a third person,⁶⁴ and a surety will be subrogated to security given by a third person to the principal to secure performance of the former's promise to the principal to assume and pay the debt for which the surety is bound,⁶⁵ or to securities given by a purchaser to the creditor to secure payment for purchased property previously belonging to the principal, but sold by the creditor on execution, under a judgment obtained against the principal for the debt on which the surety is bound.⁶⁶

d. Rights and Remedies Given by Law or Obtained by Legal Proceedings

- (1) In general
- (2) Priorities and special privileges and remedies

(1) In General

A surety will be subrogated to all legal rights and remedies available to the creditor to obtain payment of the debt, and to any rights which the creditor has ac-

(2) Fact that mortgage was marked "paid" and that record of mortgage was marked "satisfied" did not affect surety's right of subrogation against primary debtor.—Bradley v. Bentley, 163 So. 351, 231 Ala. 28.

(3) Fact that value of mules and wagon mortgaged by tenant exceeded value of landlord's share of cotton crop which was applied by bank toward payment of mortgage indebtedness did not prevent landlord, as tenant's surety, from recovering mules and wagon in detinue action against tenant, under right of subrogation.—Bradley v. Bentley, supra.

Record satisfaction of mortgage

Where complainant's intestate as surety on note secured by real estate

mortgage paid the indebtedness and was subrogated to rights and remedies of mortgagee, record satisfaction of mortgage made by one acting under power of attorney from mortgagee could not defeat rights of complainant.—McGlaughn v. Pearman, 18 So.2d 80, 245 Ala. 524.

Debt merged with judgment

The merging of indebtedness evidenced by mortgage notes with judgment on mortgage debt did not change nature of indebtedness, but mortgage continued to secure mortgage debt and remained as security for one in position of surety who was compelled to pay the debt.—Priess v. Buchsbaum, 76 N.E.2d 195, 332 Ill. App. 565.

quired by the pursuit of such remedies, as well as to statutory and common-law liens which exist in favor of the creditor to secure payment of the debt.

A surety will, in general, be subrogated to all legal rights and remedies available to the creditor, to obtain payment of the debt,⁶⁷ and to any rights which the creditor has acquired by the pursuit of such remedies.⁶⁸ Thus, where a surety pays a judgment rendered against the principal and surety, the surety is entitled to proceed in the name of the original judgment plaintiff to enforce collection of the judgment in any way in which such plaintiff could have proceeded.⁶⁹

Liens. Sureties will generally be subrogated to any statutory⁷⁰ or common-law⁷¹ lien which exists in favor of the creditor to secure payment of the debt.

(2) Priorities and Special Privileges and Remedies

Generally a surety who has paid the debt will be subrogated to any right of priority, special privilege, or remedy which the law accords to the debt, or in connection with its enforcement because of the character of the debt or the character or status of the creditor.

The generally accepted rule seems to be that a surety who has paid the debt will be subrogated to such right of priority, special privilege, or remedy where the law accords a right of priority to the debt,⁷² or some particular remedy or privilege in connection with its enforcement,⁷³ because of the character of the debt⁷⁴ or the character or status of the creditor,⁷⁵ even as against a cosurety or his estate.⁷⁶ Thus, a surety for a debt owing to a state⁷⁷ or the United States⁷⁸ will usually be sub-rogated to the sovereign right to have prior payment from the estate of the principal. However, a surety's right of subrogation to the priority of the United States cannot operate contrary to the interests of the United States,⁷⁹ and there are a number of cases establishing the view that a state's prerogative right of preference or priority is not a right which will pass to a surety by way of subrogation.⁸⁰ Furthermore, a claim of priority may be untenable under the controlling statutes,⁸¹ and such a claim will not be allowed where it would be inequitable to allow it.⁸² Under a statute providing that, when the principal in any bond given to the United States is insolvent and the surety pays the money due on the bond, he shall have such priority as is given to the United States, the right of the surety thereunder exists only where the facts fall strictly within the provisions of the statute.⁸³ Apparently a surety subrogated to a priority can claim priority only with respect to the amount actually paid and not for interest accruing after the payment.⁸⁴

e. Rights and Remedies against Third Persons

A surety may become subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditor against a third person if the right of the surety is superior to the equities of the one against whom the right is sought to be enforced.

A surety may become subrogated to the civil⁸⁵ rights and remedies of the creditor against a third person,⁸⁶ such as a third person, who as to the principal is primarily liable for the debt or default which the surety has been compelled to satisfy,⁸⁷ or who, although not liable to the principal, should equitably be regarded as primarily liable as to the surety;⁸⁸ but, with respect to the latter, subrogation

will be denied if the equities of the third person are equal or superior to those of the surety.⁸⁹

When it is sought to enforce the right of subrogation, something more must be shown than that defendant could have been compelled by the original creditor to pay the debt,⁹⁰ and the right of a surety to recover from a third person does not stand on the same footing as the right to recover from the principal.⁹¹ The right to recover from a third person is conditional on whether or not the right of the one seeking subrogation is superior to the equities of those against whom the right is sought to be enforced, in contrast to the right to recover from the principal, which is absolute.⁹² A surety will not be subrogated to the primary and payee-creditor's right of action against a third person, who, as to the surety, is also a creditor, so that the surety would have been liable to such third person had the latter been compelled to pay.⁹³

Contractual relations

(1) Before debtor's surety can be subrogated to creditor's rights to recover debt, which surety was required to pay, from third person who has agreed to pay debt, such third person must have agreed with debtor or creditor to pay debt by contract on sufficient consideration.—U. participation in the original wrongful act or negligence on the part of the third party sought to be charged,⁹⁸ but it is not necessary that such negligence be culpable or gross.⁹⁹ Subrogation on behalf of a surety is never applied against an innocent person wronged by the principal's fraud.¹

Where a sheriff has become liable to the creditor because of his failure to perform his legal duties in making the debt out of the property of the principal, a surety who thereafter pays the debt will be subrogated to the creditor's right of action against the sheriff² and the sureties on his official bond.³ A surety for one of two joint tort-feasors will be subrogated to the creditor's rights against the other, to the extent of one half the debt, where the situation is such that there is a right of contribution as between the tort-feasors.⁴ There are also cases to the effect that a surety for one tort-feasor may be subrogated to the creditor's rights against the other, even though the principal has no right of contribution against the other tort-feasor,⁵ but as to this there is some authority to the contrary.⁶

Persons receiving trust property or participating in breach of trust. When a surety for a fiduciary, or person occupying a representative or official position, has made good a default of the principal resulting from a misapplication or misappropriation of trust assets, the surety will be subrogated to the rights of the beneficiary or obligee against a third person who has received the trust property with notice or without value,⁷ or who, with knowledge, has participated in the breach of trust by assisting

(1) The doctrine of subrogation does not apply in favor of a surety company on a fidelity bond against persons who did not participate in the wrongful act of the wrongdoer.

(2) A brokers' surety which paid brokers' customers for loss sustained when brokers' office manager cashed checks payable to customers by forging their signatures could not, under doctrine of subrogation, recover from collecting bank which cashed the checks the loss sustained, since neither such bank nor the surety was a wrongdoer, and equity would not compel the bank, admittedly an innocent party, to bear the loss.—Jones v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, supra.

Receipt in payment of principal's personal tax obligations

(1) A surety on Marion County treasurer's fidelity bond was not precluded, as Marion County's subrogee, from recovering from Multnomah County and city which received Marion County's checks in payment of treasurer's personal tax obligations, on theory that neither county tax collector nor city treasurer could accept anything other than money in payment of taxes, where checks were cashed by county and city.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Multnomah County, 138 P.2d 597, 171 Or. 287, 148 A.L.R. 926.

(2) Nor is surety precluded from maintaining action on theory that bond also protected Multnomah County and the city and that their equities were equal or superior to or enabling the principal to misappropriate the prop- | erty.⁸ A surety cannot follow trust funds into the

those of surety, since under statute right to sue on bond accrues to person injured by misconduct, and Multnomah County and city participating in misconduct could not claim that they were injured thereby.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Multnomah County, supra.

Return or repayment

(1) In action by bank teller's surety to recover from stockbrokers money abstracted by teller and represented by drafts and checks presented to brokers for purchase of stock, where all funds received by the brokers from the teller were received in bad faith, the brokers could not discharge their obligation to the bank by paying to the teller the money, or a part thereof, which they had received in bad faith from the teller, unless the teller in turn paid such amounts to the bank.—Fenner v. American Surety Co. of New York, Tex.Civ.App., 156 S.W.2d 279, error refused.

(2) Where it appeared that prior to time the teller began trading with the brokers he was short in his accounts with bank and where money of the teller was paid by brokers to the surety without condition or request regarding how it was to be applied, the surety had the right to apply it to the oldest indebtedness.—*Fenner v. Dependent on breach of bond

As regards right of county tax collector's surety, which paid amount of judgment rendered against it representing taxes for which collector failed to account because of unlawful withdrawals, to recover from county depository, under doctrine of subrogation for depository's alleged wrongful participation in the making of the unlawful withdrawals, the rights of the surety, if any, were determinable solely by whether or not the collector breached his bond to account to the county for moneys received by him.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Farmers & Merchants Nat. Bank of Nocona, Tex. Civ.App., 121 S.W.2d 503, error dismissed.

Joint control agreement

As regards surety's right of subrogation, agreement between surety and guardian requiring countersigning by surety of checks, drafts, etc., drawn by guardian, and for joint control of contents of safety deposit box, did not cast on surety responsibility of investigating value and security of bonds purchased by guardian with funds of ward.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Heitman Trust Co., 46 N.E.2d 155, 317 Ill.App. 256.

Sureties on guardian's bond were subrogated to rights of ward to claim against assets of bank for guardianship funds paid to guardian individually for his own use.—State ex rel. Robertson v. Bank of Granville, 68 S.W.2d 969, 17 Tenn.App. 512.

Unlawful agreement between official and depository

(1) An agreement between depository bank and tax collector that items received by collector would be deposited in a collection account and would thereafter be distributed by collector to his depository accounts being unlawful in so far as it undertook to change bank's responsibility for deposits, and not precluding bank from becoming liable to the state for permitting collector to withdraw money from collection account otherwise than by means of checks in favor of treasurers or for his compensation, collector's surety, which had reimbursed state for amount of shortage in collector's accounts, was entitled to recover from bank, as subrogee of state, the sums paid by surety to state.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Citizens Nat. Bank of Waco, C.C.A.Tex., 100 F.2d

807, rehearing denied 101 F.2d 974, certiorari denied Citizens Nat. Bank of Waco v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 59 S.Ct. 827, 307 U.S. 626, 83 L.Ed. 1509.

(2) The depository's right to ultimate recourse on county tax collector personally does not defeat right of collector's surety in such case to recover from bank sums paid by surety to make good shortage in collector's accounts.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Citizens Nat. Bank of Waco, C.C.A.Tex., 101 F.2d 974, certiorari denied Citizens Nat. Bank of Waco v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 59 S.Ct. 827, 307 U.S. 626, 83 L.Ed. 1509.

(3) Where tax collector was short in highway account at another bank and made withdrawals evidently to cover the shortage, surety company which paid shortage in collection account was not because of fact that company was also surety on highway account estopped from recovering from bank as subrogee of state, since bank by permitting such withdrawals made it possible to cover up the shortage.—Citizens Nat. Bank of Waco, Tex. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, C.C.A.Tex., 117 F.2d 852, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 947, 313 U.S. 570, 85 L.Ed. 1528.

(4) Under statute requiring depository to pay tax money deposited in it only to treasurers entitled to receive it, depository was required to know the purpose of checks drawn by county tax collector which were not made payable to treasurers, and the collector's surety had right to assume that bank would require collector to comply with the law.—Citizens Nat. Bank of Waco, Tex. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, C.C.A.Tex., 117 F.2d 852, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 947, 313 U.S. 570, 85 L.Ed. 1528.

(5) The surety was not liable for and the bank was not entitled to set off against surety's claim amount allegedly due to bank from tax collector as penalty for failure to deposit ad valorem and motor vehicle fees collected by the tax collector.—Citizens Nat. Bank of Waco, Tex. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, C.C.A.Tex., 117 F.2d 852, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 947, 313 U.S. 570, 85 L.Ed. 1528.

hands of one who is not responsible therefor even to the beneficiary or creditor.⁹

When the third person has paid value, or has received no benefit from the misappropriation, and has acted innocently, without negligence, and with constructive notice only, there are some cases which regard his equity as superior and deny subrogation to the surety, although the third person is liable to the creditor because of constructive notice or technical breach of duty.¹⁰ Other cases, however, appear to grant subrogation even in such a situation,¹¹ and, if the circumstances are such as to show negligence, or positive wrong, on the part of the third person, subrogation is quite uniformly granted against him, although there was no benefit received and no actual knowledge or intention to participate in the breach of trust.¹²

Apparently a person who participates innocently, and is the victim of an official's wrong, is a person to whom the surety is liable under a statute making the bond of an official for the benefit of any person injured by his wrongful act, and because of such liability to the third person the surety will not be subrogated against him;¹³ but it seems that such a statute does not prevent subrogation against one who knowingly or negligently participates in an official's breach of trust.¹⁴

§ 55. — Against Whom Surety May Enforce Liens and Securities of Creditor

A surety's right to subrogation to the claim of a paid creditor may not be asserted to the detriment of innocent creditors of an insolvent cosurety, and generally not against persons acquiring the property, or interests in the property, of the debtor prior to the date of the suretyship undertaking, but a surety may generally enforce the liens and securities of the creditor on the property of the principal against persons acquiring the property or an interest therein subsequent to the contract of suretyship, although before payment.

A surety's right to subrogation to the claim of a paid creditor may not be asserted to the detriment of innocent creditors of an insolvent cosurety.¹⁵

Expiration of term of office

The town collector's sureties, who had reimbursed town for collector's failure to pay excess commissions into town treasury, were not barred from recovering against bank alleged to have aided collector, on ground that town had lost its right against collector on expiration of his term of office and that collector's only duty was to pay funds to his successor, where collector had not paid money retained either to town treasurer or to his successor.—*State Bank & Trust Co. v. Depository innocently paying on forged indorsements

Subrogation will not be enforced as against a depository innocently paying out public moneys on warrants payable to fictitious payees and wrongfully indorsed by the principal.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Lewis State Bank, C.C.A.Fla., 58 F.2d 559.

Repayment of loan applied to payment of taxes.

Where bank's loan to sheriff was used to pay taxing units for taxes collected by sheriff and no part of loan was used for sheriff's individual use, surety on bond of sheriff who defaulted in paying over taxes collected to taxing units was not entitled to subrogation against bank whose loan was paid by sheriff from taxes collected, notwithstanding bank knew that payment was made out of taxes.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Walker, 78 S.W.2d 34, 257 Ky. 397.

Innocent purchaser of trust property

(1) Where trustee misappropriated proceeds of sale of trust property, the equities of surety on trustee's bond, arising by reason of surety's obligation to make good defalcation of trustee, were not greater than those of innocent purchaser and, hence, surety was not entitled to subrogation against purchaser.—National Casualty Co. v. Caswell & Co., 45 N.E.2d 698, 317 Ill.App. 66.

(2) Where purchaser of trust property made check payable to trustee individually and trustee misappropriated money which surety on trustee's bond was obliged to pay, under Uniform Fiduciary Obligations Act, failure of purchaser to add words "as trustee" to name of trustee on check did not indicate such negligence on part of purchaser as would entitle surety to subrogation

substituted to the liens and securities of the creditor where to permit him to enforce them would defeat an interest acquired and held by a third person in the property of the principal which interest, although subordinate to that of the creditor, is prior in date to the undertaking of the surety.¹⁶ Where, however, the surety becomes bound, and the creditor takes a mortgage to secure the debt, in ignorance of a prior unrecorded mortgage which the principal has previously given on the same property, the surety is entitled to be subrogated to the creditor's mortgage and to enforce his right of priority over the unrecorded mortgage,¹⁷ even though the surety receives notice of the latter mortgage shortly before he pays the debt.¹⁸

Persons acquiring interest in principal's property subsequent to suretyship. Since, to prevent its impairment by act of the principal, a surety's equity or right to be subrogated is regarded as coming into existence at the time the contract of suretyship is entered into, as discussed supra § 47 c, a surety may generally enforce the liens and securities of the creditor on the property of the principal, against persons acquiring the property, or an interest therein, subsequent to the contract of suretyship, although before payment, to the same extent as could the creditor, for as to such persons the surety is usually considered as having the superior equity.¹⁹ If the person acquiring the subsequent interest has notice of the surety's claims, as well as of the rights of the creditor, the superiority of the surety's equity is even more clear.²⁰ Exceptions are made, and subrogation to, or enforcement of, the creditor's rights will be denied as against subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers where there are circumstances which would render it inequitable;²¹ and a surety, of course, cannot enforce a lien or security of the creditor against a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer where the lien or security is unenforceable even by the creditor.²²

Release by surety, of indemnity given by principal, after land subject to a lien of the creditor has been sold to a third person, does not prevent the surety from being subrogated to the lien against the third person where the release has been made in ignorance, and without notice, of the equitable rights of the purchaser.²³

§ 56. — Subrogation as between Successive and Independent Sureties

- a. Successive sureties
- b. Independent sureties

a. Successive Sureties

If a subsequent surety becomes bound for the benefit of the principal alone, without the consent or agreement of the original surety, and probably to his prejudice, the first surety is entitled to subrogation against the subsequent one, and the latter is denied subrogation against the former, but the rule is otherwise where there is no prejudice to the first surety, or where the second becomes bound for the benefit, and with the concurrence, of the first surety.

Terminal Warehousing Corp., 93 S.W.2d 1265, 170 Tenn. 198—60 C.J. p 767 note 82 [a].

Where bank held, as collateral for testator's note, stock and life policy naming widow as beneficiary, and, pursuant to widow's guaranty, deducted amount of note from proceeds of policy, widow was held not entitled to lien on stock by subrogation to bank's rights to exclusion of party who paid substantial part of purchase price under contract with testator to purchase stock which, if applied in reduction of bank loan, would have paid the entire note, released the stock, and left the proceeds of the policy unimpaired.—In re Kelley's Estate, 289 N.Y.S. 1079, 160 Misc. 421, affirmed 296 N.Y.S. 923, 251 App.Div. 847.

agreement of the original or prior surety and possibly or probably to his prejudice, the equities of the first surety are regarded as superior, so that he is entitled to subrogation against the subsequent surety,²⁴ and the latter is denied subrogation against the former.²⁵ The rule is otherwise, however, and the second surety may be subrogated against the first where there is no prejudice to the first surety,²⁶ or the second surety becomes bound for the benefit, and with the consent and concurrence, of the first surety;²⁷ and the first surety is not entitled to be subrogated against the second.²⁸ Although there has been no consent or concurrence of the first surety, it seems, according to some cases, that the superior equities are with the subsequent surety if he enters into his obligation in reliance on the security afforded by the first surety.²⁹

b. Independent Sureties

Generally the doctrine of subrogation will not be applied so as to permit a surety for one independent and distinct obligation to enforce the liability of a surety for an entirely different obligation, although the situation is such that each of the sureties would be liable for the same loss.

While one surety may enforce the liability of another surety bound for an obligation with respect to which the first surety is subrogated to the rights of the creditor,³⁰ and a surety will be subrogated to

Original surety against surety on judicial bond

(1) Where there is a judgment or decree against a principal debtor and his surety, and a third party, at the instance of the principal and for his sole benefit, without the consent or agreement of the original or prior surety and probably or possibly to his prejudice, enters as surety for the principal in an obligation, the effect of which is to suspend the execution of the judgment or decree and thus prejudice the rights of the first surety, the equities of the prior surety are superior, if the prior surety, by virtue of his undertaking, has to pay the judgment or any other obligation for the payment of which the surety on the suspending or supersedeas bond is bound under his bond; and the prior surety will be subrogated to all the rights of the creditor under the suspending or supersedeas bond against the surety thereon.

60 C.J. p 768 note 89 [a].

(2) This doctrine, however, has no application to extend the scope of the liability of the surety on a suspending or supersedeas bond beyond the scope of the terms of the bond. It subrogates the prior surety to such rights, and only such rights, as the creditor has against the surety on the suspending or supersedeas bond. It does not enlarge those rights.—Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Board of Sup'rs of Warren County, supra.

(3) Thus, sureties on suspending and supersedeas bonds given on suspending order and supersedeas following order for officer's removal were not liable to surety on officer's original bond for reimbursement of payments for officer's defalcations prior to order for removal.—Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 24 P.2d 906, 133 Cal.App. 711.

(2) Thus, sureties on supersedeas bond who were compelled to pay judgment on affirmation were not entitled to recover from surety on release of attachment bond, when stay bond was executed solely at request of judgment debtor without knowledge or consent of surety on prior bond.—King v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., supra—60 C.J. p 769 note 90 [b].

Wis.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Maryland Casualty Co., 268 N.W. 226, 222 Wis. 174.

Official surety and sureties for depository

(1) Equities between depository sureties and surety on county treasurer's official bond after bank in which treasurer deposited county funds closed were not equal, and depository sureties had a more primary duty, as regards right of surety on treasurer's official bond to be subrogated against sureties on depository bond; and the surety on treasurer's official bond who was required to pay loss became subrogated to treasurer's right against sureties on depository bond, and could recover against depository sureties any balance owing on depository bond after county was paid in full, notwithstanding official surety knew that treasurer's deposit was illegal or that the principal's rights against the surety of one who is bound to indemnify the principal,³¹ generally, it seems, the doctrine of subrogation will not be applied so as to permit a surety, for one independent and distinct obligation, to enforce the liability of a surety for an entirely different obligation, although the situation is such that each of the sureties would be liable for the same loss.³² It has been held that, if independent sureties bound to the same creditor, but for different obligations, are both compelled to help make good the same loss, neither surety will be subrogated to the creditor's rights to the exclusion of the other, but both will be subrogated in the proportion in which they discharged the loss.³³

§ 57. Subrogation to Rights of Principal

A surety is subrogated to such rights and remedies as the principal has in connection with the debt, which will afford him a means of reimbursement.

A surety is subrogated to such rights and remedies as the principal has in connection with the debt, which will afford him a means of reimbursement;³⁴ and this right exists independently of an

treasurer and depository sureties participated in illegal transaction, since the surety on official bond was not required to force treasurer to take funds out of bank where they illegally reposed.—Beaver County v. Home Indemnity Co., 52 P.2d 435, 88 Utah 1.

(2) As regards right of subrogation, county treasurer was creditor of depository bank, whether or not statute exempts him from liability in event bank failed to pay, if bank furnished required surety bond or collateral security, and county was creditor of county treasurer who wrongfully deposited county funds in bank, notwithstanding county could recoup its losses when bank closed from bank, depository sureties, and surety on treasurer's official bond.—Beaver County v. Home Indemnity Co., supra.

(3) Where township treasurer's surety wrote treasurer that surety and reinsurers would not continue on his bond unless treasurer protected township deposit otherwise than by accepting bank directors' depository bond, and that treasurer should obtain security and take other steps, surety did not repudiate depository bond so as to bar its action thereon.—Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Mueller, 9 N.E.2d 361, 291 Ill.App. 56.

(4) Where depository bond ran to treasurer, attempted revocation, if any, of such bond by treasurer's official surety before bank failed and surety became liable could not bar surety's action on depository bond after bank's failure and assignment of bond, since surety had no prior right in bond.—Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Mueller, supra.

(5) Negligence of treasurer in taking collateral security cannot be predicated on fact that deposit was greater than treasurer's books showed, or that collateral securities taken were not worth par, which circumstances were due to fraud and misrepresentation of bank and hence not available to sureties.—National Surety Co. v. Salt Lake County, C.C.

Assignment of lease

Surety on bond for assignee which assumed obligations of leasehold, assigned with consent of lessor which reserved all rights against original lessee, was not subrogated to lessor's rights against lessee by paying defaulted rent and taxes under bond, since lessee was in position of surety liable in first instance to lessor and not to assignee, and surety, by paying assignee's obligations, acquired no claim against lessee.—National Surety Co. v. Principal's claim against creditor

Surety paying state's deposit in insolvent national bank was entitled to state auditor's warrant held by bank, and did not waive right of subrogation by filing proof of claim for only amount of deposit as required by receiver.—Union Indemnity Co. v. Stevens, C.C.A.Miss., 57 F.2d 839.

Equitable principles as basis of right

Statute concerning substantive right of contribution is not a source of right of subrogation, and right of indemnitor to be subrogated to rights and remedies of his principal whose liability he has satisfied stands entirely on principles of equity.—Silver Fleet Motor Exp. v. Zody, D.C.Ky., 43 F.Supp. 459.

Collateral security

On payment of the principal debt by a surety, surety is entitled in equity to be subrogated to principal's assignment.³⁵ Since a statute providing for subrogation to the rights of the creditor only is but declaratory of the common law,³⁶ such a statute does not preclude a surety from being subrogated to the rights and remedies of his principal as well.³⁷

Apparently there can be no subrogation to rights of the principal which have no connection with the debt which the surety has paid;³⁸ and subrogation to the principal's rights does not seem to extend so far as to entitle a surety on a debt, created for money borrowed, to a specific equitable right in the money, or any property right, or credit, that the principal has obtained with the money.³⁹ Ordinarily, a surety cannot be subrogated to the rights of his principal against other parties where the claims of the principal against those parties rest on an illegal contract with such parties,⁴⁰ but this rule does not pertain where the right of the principal to which the surety claims subrogation is a right to recover

public moneys.⁴¹ Generally, a surety claiming to be subrogated to the rights of his principal stands in the place of the principal; his rights are the same, and defenses good against the principal are good against him.⁴²

Although the right to subrogation never arises until payment is made,⁴³ and the surety loses no right by waiting to present his petition for subrogation until payment is made,⁴⁴ the right of a surety to be subrogated to the rights of its principal against a third person may be waived by taking a position inconsistent with the right to subrogation.⁴⁵ The fact that the surety was informed by the corporate principal's trustees that they considered that the surety was only a general creditor of the principal was immaterial as respects the surety's subrogation to the corporation's rights against an officer thereof on the surety's payment of losses caused by the officer.⁴⁶

Contribution

(1) Indemnitors who paid judgment rendered against their principal for injury to third person resulting from concurrent negligence for which both the principal and defendant were vicariously liable as joint tortfeasors were subrogated to statutory right of their principal to enforce contribution from defendant because of having satisfied the common liability.—Silver Fleet Motor Exp. v. Zody, supra.

(2) Judgment debtor's surety in enforcing judgment obtained by plaintiffs against other debtor should not be allowed to go further than to satisfy statutory provisions for contribution between judgment debtors.—Martin v. Miller, 272 N.Y.S. 914, 242 App.Div. 38, affirmed 195 N.E. 374, 266 N.Y. 668.

§ 58. Subrogation to Rights of Cosurety

It has been stated that a surety seeking contribution from a cosurety must permit the cosurety to be subrogated to the rights acquired by the surety on payment of the obligation.⁴⁷ Subrogation of surety to rights of the creditor to obtain payment from a cosurety who is bound to contribute see supra § 47 a. a. Sureties for public depositaries

- b. Sureties of sureties and indemnitors

a. Sureties for Public Depositaries

A surety for a public depositary who has been compelled to pay losses resulting from a failure of the depositary will be subrogated to the general rights of the depositor to collect the losses; and, if the depositor is a state having a right to prior payment, the surety may be subrogated to such right.

Where a surety on a bond given to secure the repayment of public funds deposited with a duly designated depositary has been compelled to pay for losses resulting from a failure of the depositary, the surety will be subrogated to the general rights of the depositor to collect the losses from the assets of the depositary,⁴⁸ or a state guaranty fund,⁴⁹ or right of action against one who has given notes

(1) Held permissible where agreement is valid.—Southern Surety Co. of New York v. Hollis, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 716, affirmed Hollis v. Southern Surety Co. of New York, Com.App., 63 S.W.2d 374.

(3) Validity of contractual provisions for pro tanto subrogation of sureties generally see supra § 48 a (3).

Extent of participation in assets

(1) Under a statute providing for the ratable distribution of assets of insolvent national banks, where a state obtained partial satisfaction of its deposit claim against an insolvent national bank, and the surety paid the balance, the surety was entitled to receive future dividends on the basis of the original claim of the state, and the extent of its participation was not required to be measured by the sum actually expended to discharge the principal's obligation, since the surety, succeeding to the state's right, also succeeded to the state's means of enforcing it.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Bethlehem Nat. Bank of Bethlehem, Pa., Pa., 62 S.Ct. 226, 314 U.S. 314, 86 L.Ed. 241, 138 A.L.R. 509.

(2) In such case it was held the surety was entitled to interest but not to counsel fees.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Bethlehem Nat. Bank of Bethlehem, D.C.Pa., 33 F.Supp. 722, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 116 F.2d 75, reversed on other grounds 62 S.Ct. 226, 314 U.S. 314, 86 L.Ed. 241, 138 A.L.R. 509.

(3) Under statute providing for sale of bonds pledged by bank to secure repayment of public money deposited therein, and making surplus, after payment of amount due depositing unit and expenses of sale, payable to bank, where city was paid full amount of its deposits in bank which failed, through sale of bonds pledged by bank, and through payment by surety of bank, and assigned to surety its right to any moneys from claim filed with receiver of bank, surety could not recover from receiver surplus from sale of bonds.—Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. v. Boise City Nat. Bank, 98 P.2d 637, 61 Idaho 124.

(4) Where county, having deposit in closed bank secured by state bonds and indemnity bond, sold state bonds at solicitation of indemnity company which paid remainder of loss and took assignment of county's entire claim against bank, indemnity company could only file claim for amount it was required to pay, it being subrogated to such amount and not to amount of county's original deposit.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Hood, 175 S.E. 135, 206 N.C. 639.

(5) Where county depository bonds were insufficient to cover deposits in insolvent depository and provision in one of bonds limiting surety to its "pro rata" liability where deposit exceeded amount of bond was valid, dividends declared by receiver were payable to county until its loss should be satisfied and thereafter to sureties in ratio of their payments to county.—Reichert v. Peoples State Bank for Savings, 263 N.W. 738, 273 Mich. 543.

(6) Sureties on failed bank's county depository bonds were not subrogated by payment of county's claims against bank to funds deposited for payment of bank coupons, such deposits not creating trust.—Coahoma County, Miss., v. Mississippi Fire Ins. Co., C.C.A.Miss., 68 F.2d 489.

in payment of bonds of the depositary which the depositary was to sell for cash and the proceeds of which he was to deposit.⁵⁰ A surety who was an active participant in a wrongful act in connection with the securing of the deposit may not, however, be permitted to assert a claim for subrogation superior to the claims of innocent depositors and creditors of the bank.⁵¹

In accordance with the general rule, discussed supra § 52, that a surety can be subrogated only to securities held for the particular debt for which the surety is bound, a surety on a depositary's bond will not be subrogated with respect to securities which the depositary has given public officials to

Subrogation to depositor's right of priority. If the depositor is a state having a right to prior payment from the assets of the failed depositary, the surety will, in many jurisdictions, be subrogated to such right as against general depositors and creditors of the depositary.⁵³ A few courts, displaying an unhidden dislike for a rule which permits a surety, who has been paid to assume the risk, to assert a right of priority to the prejudice or exclusion of general depositors and creditors have held that the state's prerogative right of priority is not a right to which such a surety can be subrogated.⁵⁴

United States

(1) Under 31 U.S.C.A. § 193, which confers such priority as is secured to the United States on a surety who pays the money due on a bond given to the United States, a surety on a bond, given the United States to secure a deposit of funds which it holds in trust for Indians on a reservation, will be substituted to the government's right of priority against the assets of the insolvent depositary.—In re Liquidation of Bank of Woodburn, 42 P.2d 740, 149 Or. 649—60 C.J. p 775 note 42 [b].

(2) The rule applies, notwithstanding proof of claim filed by United States and certificate of proof of claim issued by liquidating agent and assigned to surety did not claim or grant priority.—Barnett v. American Surety Co. of New York, C.C.A.Okl., 77 F.2d 225.

(3) Since bonds given by a depositary for the money of bankrupt estates secure debts not due or payable to the United States even though the bonds, pursuant to statute, name the United States as payee, sureties on such bonds are not entitled to a preference as respects amounts paid in conformity with the bonds on the insolvency of the depositary.—Florida Bank & Trust Co. of West Palm Beach v. Union Indemnity Co., C.C.A. Fla., 55 F.2d 640, certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 6, 287 U.S. 600, 77 L.Ed. 522.

(4) Under Oklahoma statute entitling surety who has paid the amount of a depositary bond securing deposits of state, county, municipal, or "other public funds" in a failed bank to participate in pro rata division of assets of bank, the term "other public funds" must be restricted to funds ejusdem generis, and does not apply to depositary bonds securing United States funds, and as thus construed there is no conflict between the state and federal statutes.—Barnett v. American Surety Co. of New York, supra.

Where sanitary district's deposits with bank were not made in manner required by statute, no title passed to the funds, no relation of debtor and creditor was established, and funds constituted a preferred claim when bank became insolvent, surety on bank's bond which paid full amount of bond to district became subrogated to extent of amount paid.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Niles Bank Co., Com.Pl., 70 N.E.

2d 229, affirmed 71 N.E.2d 742, 79 Ohio App. 15.

Surety on bond executed by bank which was not a designated depositary to secure funds deposited by probate judge, having paid penalty of bond to state, county, and its political subdivisions, was entitled to subrogation, against assets of bank in hands of receiver, to rights of owners of funds and not restricted to such rights as probate judge might have.—Salmon v. State of Alabama, for Use and Benefit of U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., C.C.A.Ala., 81 F.2d 845.

General creditors of insolvent state depositary could not be subrogated to state's preferential rights to exclusion of sureties on depositary bond.—State v. Liberty Bank & Trust Co., 52 S.W.2d 150, 165 Tenn. 40.

Unauthorized assignment

State treasurer's assignment without authority of commonwealth's claim as depositor to surety on bond securing deposits gave no rights additional to those acquired by equitable subrogation.—In re South Philadelphia State Bank's Insolvency, supra.

Sovereign right to priority

(1) Sovereign right of state to priority of payment over other depositors in closed bank cannot pass by subrogation to another, although statutory right to priority can so pass.—In re Harr, 179 A. 725, 319 Pa. 193—60 C.J. p 775 note 43 [a].

(2) Surety company paying amount of commonwealth's deposit in insolvent trust company to common-

and other cases have reached the same result by holding that the state, by lending its money at interest, taking security therefor, and other acts, waives its right of priority so that no such right remains to which the surety can be subrogated.⁵⁵ It has also been held that, if the surety asserts its rights under a proof of claim which the state has previously filed as a general creditor, the surety cannot, at the same time, assert that it has been subrogated to the state's rights as a preferred creditor.⁵⁶

A statute, providing that the state may proceed against the assets of an insolvent depositary as a preferred creditor, but that, if the state elects to proceed against the depositary's surety, the latter, by reason of his payment shall not be subrogated to the state's right of preference, defeats the sureties' right of subrogation to the state as a preferred creditor of the bank,⁵⁷ and may validly apply to a surety who executes his bond after the statute becomes effective,⁵⁸ and the fact that the statute applies only to sureties on the bonds of depositaries of state funds does not render it unconstitutional as denying the equal protection of the laws.⁵⁹ Such a statute cannot constitutionally apply to impair the vested right, to be subrogated, of a surety who has executed his bond before passage of the statute, although payment to creditor is not made until afterward.⁶⁰

It has been held, however, that a state's right to prior payment in the event of insolvency of the state depositary, which is in existence at the time a bond is executed to secure state deposits, may, before the surety has been compelled to make payment, be constitutionally removed or abrogated by legislative enactment so that no right of priority remains to which the surety can be subrogated;⁶¹ but it seems that, if a statute repealing the state's right of priority does not become effective until after insolvency of the depositary, so that the state's right of priority has already accrued, the statute cannot constitutionally apply to prevent the surety from being subrogated to that right.⁶²

b. Sureties of Sureties and Indemnitors

A surety of a surety who is compelled to pay the debt will be subrogated to the creditor's right against his immediate principal, and also to whatever rights his principal had.

A surety of a surety, who is compelled to pay the debt, will be subrogated to the creditor's rights against his immediate principal;⁶³ and he has the same equity to be subrogated to the creditor's rights and remedies against the original debtor as the surety for whom he became bound,⁶⁴ but his rights in this respect are limited to those of the original surety, and, if the latter has been fully paid and indemnified by the principal,⁶⁵ or the principal has a right of set-off arising out of the transaction which would fully defeat his right to reimbursement had he paid the debt,⁶⁶ subrogation against the original principal will be denied the surety of the surety. Likewise, it has been held that the surety on the appeal bond of an indemnitor will not be subrogated to the creditor's rights against the one whom the principal is bound to indemnify.⁶⁷ wealth could not, as subrogees of commonwealth, maintain its position as sovereign entitled to be paid amount of deposit in full; and, where commonwealth was preferred depositor in insolvent trust company under law and not as result of reorganization plan, sureties paying amount of deposit to commonwealth were not entitled to preference.—Smith v. Capital Bank & Trust Co., 191 A. 124, 325 Pa. 369.

Where judgment is rendered

c. Sureties or Guarantors on Bills or Notes

A surety or guarantor who pays a bill or note will be subrogated to all rights and remedies which were available to the holder or owner of the instrument to obtain payment thereof.

A surety⁶⁸ or guarantor⁶⁹ who pays a bill or note will be subrogated to all rights and remedies which were available to the holder or owner of the instrument to obtain payment thereof.

On the question of whether a surety who has paid the debt and been subrogated to the creditor's rights against the principal can enforce against the latter the bond, note, or other instrument on which the surety is directly liable, the authorities are not in harmony.⁷⁰ It has been held, on the one hand, that the acquiring of the obligation by the surety does not extinguish the obligation,⁷¹ and that, on the payment of a note by the surety thereon, the title, legal and equitable, passes to, and vests in, him, and for all purposes he becomes the owner, legal and equitable, of the paper and all collateral security thereto.⁷² On the other hand, there is authority against defendant in an action which is completely defended and controlled on his behalf by an insurance company which has agreed to indemnify him against such liability, and the insurance company takes an appeal giving an appeal bond to stay execution on the judgment, the surety on the appeal bond who has become such at the request of insurer only cannot, after being compelled to pay the judgment and after insurer has become insolvent, be subrogated to the rights of the judgment plaintiff against the judgment debtor where the execution of the surety's bond was the thing which prevented insurer's liability to the debtor from being realized on until after insurer became insolvent.

rights and securities of creditors against cosureties.—Niagara County Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. La Port, 253 N.Y.S. 433, 233 App.Div. 501.

Transaction creating suretyship relation

Transaction whereby tenant seeking loan from bank executed note to landlord and landlord indorsed note and transferred chattel mortgage to bank created relationship of principal and surety as between tenant and landlord and gave landlord surety's statutory right of subrogation.—Bradley v. Bentley, 163 So. 351, 231 Ala. 28.

Purchase by comakers

(1) Where three out of four joint comakers purchased notes from payee who had commenced action thereon, and notes were transferred to the three comakers' nominee, the three comakers were entitled to the right of subrogation to all the rights of the payee, and had the right to have the action assigned to their nominee.—Lit Bros., to Use of Kaplan, v. Goodman, 18 A.2d 519, 144 Pa. Super. 43.

(2) In such case entry of judgment against the four comakers would not harm the fourth comaker not joining in purchase of notes, since judgment was in no sense conclusive of rights of the four comakers among themselves, and merely put the three comakers in a position to enforce contribution to the proper extent, if any, and amount of any execution against fourth comaker was subject to control of court in exercise of sound discretion.—Lit Bros., to Use of Kaplan, v. Goodman, supra.

Cosureties

The execution of new note by two of four sureties on note, in payment of old note, would give sureties so paying a right of action against non-paying sureties on the old note itself.—Patterson v. Fuller, Tex.Civ. App., 110 S.W.2d 1230, error dismissed.

holding that payment by the surety extinguishes the instrument⁷³ and that a surety who has paid a note or other security without taking an assignment from the creditor may not sue thereon directly in an action at law.⁷⁴ The cases which uphold the right of a surety to relief in law or equity are not necessarily based on any continued existence of the original instrument but on the implied obligation of the principal to indemnify him, and do not require the holding that as the basis of relief the original instrument remains undischarged.⁷⁵ Where the guarantor of a note is compelled to discharge his secondary liability thereon, good conscience requires the surrender to him of the obligations of the primary debtor, so that he might proceed thereon to recoup his loss;⁷⁶ and a guarantor who was compelled to pay the holder of a note is entitled to recover from the holder the value of the note and mortgage securing it to which the guarantor became subrogated where the holder has disposed of the note and mortgage.⁷⁷

indorsement a right of subrogation presumptively arises in favor of the drawee against the guarantor.⁷⁸

d. Sureties on Construction Contractors' Bonds

- (1) In general
- (2) Against whom surety is entitled to unpaid funds

(1) In General

As a general rule a surety for a construction contractor compelled to make good the default of his principal in abandoning the contract or failing to pay materialmen and laborers acquires an interest in unpaid sums under the contract by subrogation to the rights of the principal, owner, or laborers or materialmen whose claims are paid, and is also subrogated to other rights of the principal or materialmen or laborers.

A surety for a construction contractor compelled to make good the default of his principal in abandoning the contract, or failing to pay materialmen and laborers, is usually regarded as acquiring an interest in unpaid sums under the contract by subrogation to the rights of the principal,⁷⁹ owner,⁸⁰

Substituted surety

New surety, who, on signing of renewal note, was substituted for original surety, became entitled by substitution to benefit of property mortgaged to sureties.—Arnett v. Salyersville Nat. Bank, 46 S.W.2d 124, 242 Ky. 216.

74. Ohio.—Rechtine v. Weis, 2 Ohio Supp. 380.

Subrogation to rights, priorities, and equities

Payment of note by surety has been said to extinguish the original debt, and the surety becomes subrogated only to rights of payee in securities, priorities, and equities.—Henneke v. Strack, Mo.App., 101 S.W. 2d 743.

Equitable interest in retained percentage

Under surety contract requiring owner to retain percentage of amount due contractor, surety had equitable interest in retained percentage, which could not be diverted without his consent.—American Surety Co. v. Plank & Whitsett, 165 S.E. 660, 159 Va. 1.

Fund as security for surety

The portion of consideration payable under construction contract that state, county, municipality or other public body is required by statute to retain is not only a trust fund for those performing labor and furnishing materials in connection with the work but is also security for surety on performance bond.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Herbert H. Conway, Inc., 128 P.2d 764, 14 Wash.2d 551.

Nature of right; priority

The right of surety on performance bond against percentage of consideration payable under construction contract retained by school district gained through subrogation to the claims of creditors paid by surety would be merely the right of the ordinary materialman dependent on the proper filing of notice of claim, and not entitled to priority as against other creditors.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Herbert H. Conway, Inc., supra.

Contractor's surety is entitled to exoneration by enforcement of materialman's lien under title-retaining contract.—New Jersey Fidelity & Plate Glass Ins. Co. v. General Electric Co., 168 S.E. 425, 160 Va. 342.

Such a surety will also be subrogated to other rights of the principal,⁸³ materialmen or laborers,⁸⁴ or owner;⁸⁵ but it has been held that an optional right on the part of the owner in the event of default to take over the contractor's materials and supplies for use in completion of the contract is not a right held in trust, such as retained percentages, but is one which is waived by a demand on the surety to complete the contract, and he cannot be subrogated thereto.⁸⁶ The surety on a bond to hold the owner harmless from liens arising for labor and materials is not entitled to be subrogated as against the owner to the right of lienors whose claims he discharged by payment.⁸⁷

penalty of the bond into court, which was distributed ratably among the materialmen, leaving substantial balances still owed to them by the contractor, the surety is not subrogated to any right of the government in retained percentages owing to the contractor, since the government had no claim on the fund after completion of the work contracted for; nor is the surety subrogated to the rights of the materialmen, since the debt owed by the contractor to them remained unsatisfied.⁸⁸

By paying the claims of laborers or materialmen in accordance with the requirements of an additional bond given for their protection, a surety is not subrogated to any right of the owner or of the contractor where the construction contract conferred no rights on the laborers or materialmen to obtain payment of their bills or to file liens, and where the

(1) Generally, a surety who, under the requirement of his bond, completes the contract of a defaulting contractor, may be subrogated to all rights and remedies of the defaulting contractor against a third person, who, by a subcontract, was obligated and wrongfully failed to perform some part of the work which the surety was required to complete, although no relation of contract or of privity existed between the surety and the subcontractor, but surety stands in no better position than the principal contractor through whom his right is derived.

(2) Where contractor abandoned the contract, and subcontractor was therefore justified in treating the subcontract as terminated and in refusing to perform it, contractor's surety, who was compelled to complete the work, could not recover from subcontractor for work uncompleted under the subcontract, particularly where surety was guilty of deliberate delay and inexcusable neglect in completing the contract.—National Sur. Corp. v. Allen-Codell Co., supra.

(3) The fact that surety of contractor took from contractor an assignment of contractor's rights under his contract with subcontractor added nothing to surety's rights to recover from subcontractor.—National Sur. Corp. v. Allen-Codell Co., supra.

Surety on contractor's bond is entitled to subrogation to materialman's lien on payment of debt due materialman.—Well-McLain Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 258 N.W. 175, 217 Wis. 126—60 C.J. p 778 note 66 [c].

contractor's bond, who paid claim of subcontractor against contractor and was subrogated to rights of subcontractor, was not precluded from suing bank which had satisfied contractor's indebtedness to bank out of retained percentages paid by city on contract by fact that neither surety nor subcontractor sued bank within the time for bringing suit on the bond after work was completed, since subcontractor was not limited to suit on contractor's bond but had independent remedy, to which surety succeeded by subrogation, of suing bank within period of general statute of limitations if fund could be traced into bank.—Murphy v. National Paving Co., 281 N.W. 705, 229 Wis. 100.

contract contained no provision entitling the owner to withhold funds owing to the contractor for the payment of such claims;⁸⁹ and the mere fact that the contractor, after completion of work on the general contract, defaulted on a new contract, which was completed by the surety who was paid therefor, does not entitle the surety to subrogation with respect to funds retained under the general contract.⁹⁰

As the subrogation is limited to the extent necessary for reimbursement, the fact that the surety completes the contract at a profit does not entitle him to unpaid sums in excess of the amounts he has actually expended.⁹¹ Interest is not, however, considered profit within the rule.⁹²

A surety can acquire no right in the nature of a mechanic's lien other than through the contractor, on the theory of subrogation to the contractor's right, and hence cannot acquire it where the contractor is entitled to no such equity because he breached the contract without justification.⁹³ A surety for a construction contractor is not precluded from being subrogated to the rights of the principal in moneys due under the contract by the fact that at the time of making advances on behalf of the principal he took additional indemnity and security, in the absence of an agreement that the surety

would look only to such security and indemnity agreement.⁹⁴ Unpaid claims for labor are not defeated by the surety's right of subrogation to claims paid by the surety for materials furnished, since labor claims are independent of materialmen's claims and of equal dignity therewith in the matter of priority.⁹⁵ Where a statute provides for laborers' and materialmen's liens on street improvement assessments and bonds, which, however, terminate if no action to enforce them is brought within a specified period, a surety paying claims of laborers and materialmen after termination of their lien is not entitled to such lien by subrogation.⁹⁶

A surety of a subcontractor compelled to pay a judgment obtained by the contractor for breach of the subcontract is legally subrogated to the rights of the contractor against the principals on the bond.⁹⁷

Amounts paid and distributed. The lien of the surety is restricted to funds due, retained, or unpaid at the time of the default.⁹⁸ Accordingly, where payments are made to the contractor unconditionally, he can use the money so paid in any way he desires, and as to such payments the right of subrogation does not inhere to a surety of the payee.⁹⁹ Thus, a surety is not entitled to subrogation as to payments made by the owner to the con-

"Under federal statutes a single bond is required which must provide for the completion of the contract and the payment of labor and materialmen. . . . It has been held by federal courts that there is a direct contractual obligation to the government as a party to the contract, binding on the contractor and surety, to pay labor and materialmen. Consequently when the contractor fails to pay labor and materialmen, it is tantamount to a breach of its contract with the United States government. When this occurs and the surety pays the labor and materialmen, it stands in the position of a surety completing a contractual obligation of a defaulting contractor and performing an equitable duty to the United States. It is therefore entitled to subrogation to the rights of the United States in the fund. . . . In Pennsylvania, where our statutes and the facts coincide with the cases decided by the federal courts, we are in harmony with those decisions as illustrated by Lancaster County National Bank's Appeal, 155 A. 859, 861, 304 Pa. 437."—Du Bois v. tractor and transferred by the latter to a creditor or assignee prior to the contractor's default,¹ or even after the default if the indebtedness was bona fide and the creditor had no knowledge of the contractor's default.² The transfer of the fund does not of itself discharge the equities attached to it where the contractor, on receiving payment from the owner, fails to pay laborers or materialmen, and transfers the money received to a creditor or assignee;³ the surety is entitled to subrogation if the creditor or assignee receives such payment with knowledge of the contractor's default and prior to the surety's knowledge thereof.⁴ It has been held that the surety is entitled to recover from the assignee money paid by the owner to the assignee and contractor jointly, to the extent that such money was applied on the contractor's debt to the assignee, but not to the extent that the money was used to pay for labor and materials.⁵

Volunteer. In accordance with the general rule, stated supra § 9, that a mere volunteer who pays the debt of another is not entitled to subrogation, a surety on a contractor's bond who elects to complete the work is not entitled to be subrogated where the contractor was justified in refusing to go ahead with the work under contract, so that there was no liability on the part of the surety to complete the work or respond in damages.⁶

Equitable lien founded on assignment of future payments

(1) Under federal law, a surety may obtain relief by way of equitable lien founded on an assignment to it of future payments, but the lien is unenforceable against a transferee for value without notice of the assignment.—First Camden Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., C.C.A.N.J., 132 F.2d 114, certiorari denied Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. First Camden Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 63 S.Ct. 1157, 319 U.S. 749, 87 L.Ed. 1704.

(2) Where national bank did not know of assignment by contractor to surety of retained percentages of payments under federal contract on default, or of agreement giving surety control over payments to contractor, surety under federal law had no equitable lien on payments made to contractor as against bank which applied moneys received by contractor to unsecured debt owed bank by contractor, and such debt constituted "value."—First Camden Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., C.C.A.N.J., 132 F.2d 114, certiorari denied Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. First Camden Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 63 S.Ct. 1157, 319 U.S. 749, 87 L.Ed. 1704.

(3) Under New Jersey law, a surety's claim to funds remaining in hands of owner founded on an assignment by contractor of funds due from owner is void as to claimants for labor and materials where the contractor retains dominion over the contract moneys.—First Camden Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., C.C.A.N.J., 132 F.2d 114, certiorari denied Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. First Camden Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 63 S.Ct. 1157, 319 U.S. 749, 87 L.Ed. 1704.

(4) Where federal contractor agreed to turn over payments to surety but was allowed to collect payments without any supervision, assignment to surety of retained percentages and payments on default was void under New Jersey law as against bank to which contractor paid moneys received from federal government to discharge an unsecured debt owed to bank, which had no knowledge of the assignment, since bank was a transferee for value.—First Camden Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., C.C.A.N.J., 132 F.2d 114, certiorari denied Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. First Camden Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 63 S.Ct. 1157, 319 U.S. 749, 87 L.Ed. 1704.

Where no liens had been filed by materialmen or laborers, and board of education in good faith paid contractor who made false affidavits that all bills had been paid, the board's obligations to the contractor were discharged and board had no cause of action against contractor for conversion of which contractor's surety could avail himself against contractor after payment by surety of materialmen, laborers and others; nor could surety as subrogee maintain action against contractor either on ground that contractor had perpetrated a common law fraud against laborers and materialmen or on ground that they had an action under the lien law declaring that funds received by contractor for public improvement constitute trust funds and punishing as a larceny their misapplication by contractor.—American

Road contractor's assignee applying portion of reserve percentage due contractor to payment of advancements made to contractor and paying remainder to contracting firm and partners thereof with knowledge contractor was in default could not avoid liability to contractor's surety on ground that in effect reserve percentage had been paid to contractor under contract.—U. Estoppel to claim assignment ineffective

Where town in paying to bank a construction contract progress payment, which had been assigned to bank by contractor, did not act on contractor's certificate to town that he had paid claims in full, executed in connection with obtaining a prior progress payment, the certificate did not estop contractor's surety to claim that assignment was ineffective because contractor was in default under his contract when the assignment was made, and was not entitled to further payments.—Town of River Junction, Fla., v. (2) Against Whom Surety Is Entitled to Unpaid Funds

The right of the contractor's surety to be subrogated with respect to unpaid funds is usually regarded as superior to the claims of general creditors, the contractor or his receiver or trustee, the assignee of funds due under the contract, and various other persons.

The right of the contractor's surety to be subrogated with respect to unpaid funds is usually regarded as superior to the claims of general creditors,⁷ the contractor,⁸ a receiver of the contractor,⁹ the contractor's trustee in bankruptcy,¹⁰ a materialman who had assisted the contractor in deceiving the surety as to the contractor's assets,¹¹ or any person who receives or appropriates the proceeds of the contract with notice of the contractor's default and of the surety's rights,¹² or even creditors who seek to attach the fund after the contract of suretyship has been entered into,¹³ and apparently although the creditor may be one who has performed work for the contractor prior to the latter's abandonment.¹⁴ A surety who has paid laborers and materialmen, as required by an additional bond given for their protection, has no right, by subrogation, superior to that of other creditors of the contractor, to funds in the hands of the owner, however, notwithstanding the contractor had failed to pay such laborers and materialmen and had ceased work on the contract where the contractor was never in default, and the contract was never turned over to the surety for completion, there being no provision in the construction contract conferring rights on laborers or materialmen to obtain payment of their bills or to file liens, and no provision entitling the owner to withhold funds owing to the contractor for the payment of such claim.¹⁵ It has been held that,

Inapplicability of lien statutes

The statutes providing for liens on production of one's labor and on real estate or improvements thereon are inapplicable to claimed liens for public liability and workmen's compensation insurance premiums on retained percentages of contract prices due insured for construction of public works, and question whether such statutes were complied with is immaterial in determining whether insurer obtained preference or lien independently of mechanic's lien statutes and, if so, status thereof, with respect to claim of surety on insured's contract performance bond to payment from such fund of amount of materialmen's claims paid by surety.—Standard Acc. Ins. Co. v. U. S. Cas. Co., 188 F.2d 204, 199 Okl. 530.

Attorney's fees

Where road contractor agreed to save surety on road contractor's performance bond harmless against all liability, damages, loss and expenses, including counsel and attorney's fees which surety might be called on to incur by reason of executing bond, and surety held valid assignment of prefinal estimate and retained percentage on road contract against which there were no valid and unpaid claims, surety in action to determine liability under bond was properly reimbursed for attorney's fees out of retained percentage of road contract.

Where surety under statutory bonds guaranteeing performance by bankrupts of a highway construction contract with the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and payment of materialmen and laborers paid claims for labor and material exceeding amount remaining due from commonwealth on contract and took assignments from those whose claims were paid, and surety, under Pennsylvania law, was otherwise entitled to subrogation to unpaid balance due from commonwealth on the contract, fact that bankrupts were adjudicated bankrupt before surety paid laborers and materialmen did not affect surety's right of subrogation, the surety being subrogated in this case to the rights of the laborers and materialmen, and not to those of the contractor, and such right was paramount to trustee's right to fund remaining due under contract.—In re L. Bonds not incorporated into contract

Highway contractor's surety, who paid claims against contractor for labor and materials in accordance with his obligation on additional bonds for labor and materials, could not incorporate the additional bonds into the construction contract because of a general reference in the introduction of the contract that everything contained in the contract, as well as the proposal or bid, was made part of the specifications and contract, in order to entitle him to a preference over creditors of contractor for money due under contract.—Du Bois v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 18 A.2d 802, 341 Pa. 85.

where the surety's bond covered the contractor's obligation to materialmen which remained substantially unsatisfied notwithstanding payment by the surety of the amount of the penalty of the bond, the surety is not subrogated to any rights or remedies with respect to percentages retained under the contract, the enforcement of which would operate to the prejudice or injury of the materialmen.¹⁶ There are cases to the effect that, where the surety's bond does not render him liable for labor and material, his rights in unpaid funds, where he completes the contract after abandonment, are superior to the claims of those who have furnished labor and material to the contractor prior to the abandonment.¹⁷ Although a subcontractor is not entitled to recover the balance due for municipal work under the contractor's statutory bond because of failure to file proper notice thereunder, he may recover the balance out of unpaid money held by the city as against the surety on the contractor's bond who took an assignment of the contract and completed the work thereunder on the contractor's default, by virtue of a provision in the specifications requiring an assignment of the contract by the contractor to be subject to a prior lien for services rendered or materials supplied.¹⁸

The surety's right relates back to the date of the contract and is superior to a claim of the United States for unpaid taxes for periods subsequent to the date of the contract of suretyship, although prior to the date of payment by the surety;¹⁹ this rule applies where the owner is a mere stakeholder and has no rights of his own to assert,²⁰ and it does not prevent the United States from setting off against the sums retained by it, pursuant sion and completion of the work" by the other for a stated compensation, did not confer on contractor's surety, who had paid claims against contractor for labor and materials in accordance with his obligation on additional bonds, any special interest in funds due under the contract, and would not entitle surety to a preference over other creditors of the contractor.—*Du Bois v. Joint indemnity agreement covering construction and additional bonds

Under indemnity agreement whereby, in event of breach of contracts by contractor, surety became subrogated to rights of contractor in construction contracts, surety who paid certain materialmen was not entitled to priority in payment on distribution of balance of money received by contractor's administrator from school district, where administrator completed contracts which did not require contractor to pay materialmen, although contractor executed one joint indemnity agreement covering his applications for construction bonds and additional bonds to protect materialmen.—In re Troutwine's Estate, 178 A. 302, 117 Pa.Super. 525.

(3) Under contract for public improvement providing that on default by contractor state could cancel contract and call on surety to complete work and that amount retained by state from contractor should be forfeited, successor to surety who had assumed liability of surety on bond to state and who after cancellation of contract elected to complete contract on request by state with understanding that he was to be subrogated to rights of state to fund remaining unpaid to contractor was subrogated to rights of state to apply retained funds to cost of completion, and, hence, liens of lienors who had

"The Supreme Court's recent decision in United States v. Munsey Trust Co., 67 S.Ct. 1599, 332 U.S. 234, 91 L.Ed. 2022, decided June 23, 1947, neither reaches nor points a contrary result. There, the Government, itself in possession of the fund, asserted a claim of its own by way of set-off and, to the extent of that set-off, the fund upon which the surety's lien could operate was necessarily reduced. Quite different is such case from one like the present—as the Supreme Court observed—where 'the owner [defendant Authority herein] was a mere stakeholder and had no rights of its own to assert'. *United States v. What law governs

(1) In determining whether amount of percentage retained by state of South Dakota under highway construction contract therewith and paid by it to surety on contractor's bond is subject to equitable lien, superior to surety's claims through subrogation and impressed with trust, in favor of South Dakota bank, which loaned money to contractor on note, secured by his assignment of moneys due under contract, law of such state governs, as note, assignment, and bond were contracts made and to be performed therein.—*Seaboard Sur. Contractual provisions for benefit of obligee

The provisions of the performance bond permitting assignment by the contractor without notice to surety were for the benefit of the obligee and did not create equitable considerations in favor of an assignee sufficient to override surety's right to subrogation for his outlay on contractor's default.—Municipal Housing Authority of City of Utica v. H. G. Hatfield Elec. Corp., 34 N.Y.S.2d 995, 264 App.Div. 99.

Payment by school board of retained fund on completed school building contract to contractor's assignee having notice of outstanding claims was held to render school board liable to surety on school contractor's bond paying laborer and material claims.—Claiborne Parish School Board v. Fidelity & Deposit

the construction contract provides for the protection of laborers or materialmen or a statute requires it to do so.²⁶ Moreover, the rule applies even though the assignment was executed prior to the time the suretyship contract was entered into.²⁷ An assignee who knew of the contractor's default when appropriating reserve percentages due the contractor cannot complain of negligence and delay of the surety in discovering the contractor's default where the surety had no duty to investigate.²⁸

Some of the cases granting the surety superiority seem to have involved only assignees whose advances to the contractor were not shown to have been used in the performance of the contract, and as against such assignees the surety has been granted a superior right not only with respect to retained percentages,²⁹ but also earned and unpaid monthly estimates,³⁰ and sums in addition to the contract price, which have been appropriated to pay the contractor for extra costs;³¹ but a considerable number of cases have gone further and hold that the assignee's claim is inferior, although the assignment has been made to secure the repayment of loans which have been given to finance the contractor in the performance of his work and which have been so used,³² although the fund involved is composed of periodical installments due and earned, but unpaid, at the time of abandonment,³³ or re-

Unless bank taking alleged assignment of moneys to become due under state highway contract had no actual or constructive notice of surety's right to subrogation, surety's rights were superior; but a bank taking such assignment was bound to know that statute, contract, and bond made rights of materialmen and workmen paramount to contractor's rights, on which provision they and surety could rely, and was put on inquiry into circumstances under which contractor's surety assumed liability.—Appeal of Lancaster County Nat. 27. U.S.—Seaboard Sur. Co. v. State of N. D., D.C.N.D., 94 F.Supp. 177, 183.

Reason for rule

"The assignment to the bank was made at a time when no contract existed between Rolfsen and the State of North Dakota. There was actually nothing to assign. The proposed contract could not come to fruition without the issuance of a statutory bond, such as the surety provided in the instant case. The question, then, of priority in time appears not too important. Certainly the surety's rights with reference to equitable subrogation became effective when its obligation was fixed—that is, by the execution of the bond and its acceptance by the State of North Dakota. The bank's rights under its assignment became effective only after er there was in existence something to assign. The surety's bond had to be issued and accepted by the State of North Dakota before the contract could come into existence. That was a necessary prerequisite and known to be such by the bank. The Court must conclude, then, that the execution of the assignment prior to the existence of the contract gave the bank no superior rights."—Seaboard Sur. Co. v. State of N. D., supra.

Contract authorizing owner to apply fund to cost of completion

Where contractor, after assigning to bank moneys due under contract with state for public improvement, defaulted, contractor's surety completing work at loss was entitled to money due contractor at time of default, where contract provided state could apply such money to cost of completion.—Scarsdale Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 190 N.E. 330, 264 N.Y. 159.

Additional collateral immaterial

Fact that assignee of state contract secured additional collateral for loans to contractor was held immaterial in determining respective rights of assignee and defaulting served percentages under the contract,³⁴ and even though the assignee has voluntarily paid laborers and materialmen.³⁵

There is, however, authority for denying the surety complete subrogation and making an equitable adjustment by ordering a pro rata distribution of the fund where the assignee's loan has been used in the contract;³⁶ and apparently the surety's rights are inferior if the loans are made with the surety's knowledge and without objection on his part,³⁷ or if, at the time the surety becomes bound, he has knowledge of a financing arrangement which the contractor has already entered into with the assignee;³⁸ the assignee's rights are clearly superior where the surety expressly consents to the making of the loan to the contractor, to aid him in the contract, and to the assignment, as security, of the sums to be paid under the contract.³⁹ Moreover, it has been held that the equity of a bank lending money to be used, and used, for the payment of laborers and materialmen was superior to that of a surety who would have had to supply the money for such payment if the bank had not done so,⁴⁰ and, furthermore, there is authority asserting the right of an assignee to apply funds covered by the assignment to an antecedent indebtedness where the assignee had no knowledge or notice of the contractor's agreement with the surety that the indebtedness incurred in making the improvement would be paid out of the funds received therefor.⁴¹

In some states a distinction is drawn between retained percentages and monthly estimates or progress payments to be made to the contractor as the work progresses, the surety being subrogated as against an assignee with respect to the former funds,⁴² but not with respect to the latter.⁴³

In Minnesota, if, in accordance with an agreement made in advance, the assignee makes loans which are used to pay for labor and material for which the surety would have been liable had they remained unpaid, the right of the surety to be subrogated to the place of the laborers and materialmen he pays is inferior to the claim of the assignee;⁴⁴

"The rule developed in those [Minnesota] cases . . . is that the

but, where the money lent is to be used as the contractor sees fit and is not all applied on the particular contract, the equity of the surety is superior,⁴⁵ except as superiority may be granted to the assignee by consent of the surety.⁴⁶

Statutory provisions on the subject are controlling.⁴⁷ Such statutes are in effect written into the contract, and, if there is a conflict between the contract and the statutes, the latter must prevail.⁴⁸ Under some statutes, it is held that the surety may resort to that portion of the contract price which the owner was required to retain, and that the unpaid balance above that portion belonged to the contractor's assignee, not to the surety.⁴⁹

equity of the surety, through subrogation, is superior to that of one loaning money to the contractor, even though such money goes into performance of the contract, unless such money is loaned under a contract obligating the lender to make advances, (whether or not limited as to aggregate amount), to the contractor for use in performance of the work contract and unless such advances are so used."—Seaboard Sur. § 60. — Sureties for Fiduciaries and Officials

- a. Officials
- b. Guardians, trustees, executors, and administrators

a. Officials

A surety on the bond of a public official will generally be subrogated to all rights of the creditor or obligee whose claim the surety is compelled to satisfy and also to all rights of the official or principal.

Subrogation against persons participating in breach of trust or receiving trust property see supra § 54 e.

Surety on treasurer's later bond, having paid county for losses for which surety on bond given for earlier term was primarily liable, was held subrogated to county's rights against other surety.—Etna Casualty & Surety Co. of Hartford, Conn., v. Board of Sup'rs of Warren County, 168 S.E. 617, 160 Va. 11.

(1) A surety paying shortage of county officer could assert county's statutory lien against officer's properties.

(2) A surety paying shortage of county treasurer could enforce county's statutory lien against property taken in name of treasurer's wife, if property was purchased with funds stolen from county by treasurer, but not if property was purchased with wife's separate funds.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Clarke, supra.

Amount; set-off

principal.⁵¹ The right of subrogation goes back to the date of the contract of suretyship and takes priority over an assignment made prior to payment by the surety.⁵²

Sureties for a tax collector will be subrogated to a statutory lien to secure performance of the principal's official duties,⁵³ and, when compelled to pay for uncollected taxes, may be subrogated to the government's⁵⁴ or collector's⁵⁵ rights against delinquent taxpayers whose taxes the sureties have paid. If a collector of both state and county taxes has permitted them to become confused, embezzles an amount equal to the sum owing the state, and then turns the balance over to the county, a surety on a bond for state taxes, who pays the loss, will be subrogated to the state's right to participate in the confused tax funds and pursue its proportionate share in the hands of the county.⁵⁶

er figure to be used as entitled to priority against collector's estate, and indebtedness of one of sureties to tax collector could not be offset against amount paid to district, for purpose of determining extent of priority, since the sureties were subrogated to rights of school district, there being no offset or counterclaim as to taxes.—In re Harris' Estate, 293 N.Y.S. 250, 161 Misc. 793.

Enforcement against personal property

Fact that there was very little or no personal property in school tax collector's estate, and that proceedings had been completed for sale of realty to pay debts did not defeat right of subrogation of sureties who had made good collector's defalcation, since presumption existed that collector expended his own moneys first, and that property which he owned at time of his death represented tax moneys.—In re Harris' Estate, supra.

cipal.—Standard Acc. Ins. Co. v. Mueller, 9 N.E.2d 361, 291 Ill.App. 56.

Sureties for financial officials who are compelled to pay for losses resulting from the failure of a depository, in which public funds have been deposited without authority, will be subrogated to the obligee's rights against the failed bank,⁶² and against a subordinate official who has negligently failed to transfer the funds before the bank failed.⁶³

Sheriffs' sureties who have been compelled to satisfy a judgment because of the sheriff's default with respect to its enforcement will be subrogated to the creditor's rights against the judgment debtor.⁶⁴ If the sureties are compelled to pay for property wrongfully taken by the sheriff on legal process, they may be subrogated to the owner's rights against the creditor to whom the property has been delivered,⁶⁵ or to the sheriff's rights against the sureties on a bond which has been given by the creditor to indemnify the sheriff,⁶⁶ or his rights against a purchaser of the property.⁶⁷ Sureties compelled to pay parties beneficially interested the amount due on a judicial sale of property will be subrogated to the beneficiaries' rights with respect to a note which the sheriff has taken from a purchaser of the property.⁶⁸

A surety for a fiduciary charged with the handling or administration of an estate will be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditors or beneficiaries whose claims he has satisfied, and to the rights of the principal in connection therewith.

A surety for a fiduciary charged with the handling or administration of an estate, such as a guardian, trustee, executor, or administrator, will, on payment of the claims of creditors or beneficiaries, be subrogated to their rights and remedies⁶⁹ against the principal⁷⁰ or his property;⁷¹ or against a co-surety,⁷² an insolvent bank in which trust assets have been deposited and for which the surety has been compelled to respond,⁷³ a debtor of the estate, whom the principal has wrongfully attempted to

Where surety on executor's bond who had paid part of judgments recovered in actions on bonds against executor and sureties by beneficiaries under decree of distribution was entitled to be subrogated to rights of one beneficiary in the distribution of dividends on money which executor had on deposit in bank at time of bank's suspension, surety was entitled to receive dividends on basis of amount due before payments were made by surety on judgment; and where in such case the executor paid portion of dividends to beneficiaries before surety asserted claim as subrogee, and notice of payment was not given surety, and there was sufficient amount of dividend payments in executor's hands to make an adjustment, surety's claim in amounts paid beneficiaries could not be defeated by the priority in payment to beneficiaries.—In re Petersen's Estate, 295 N.W. 494, 67 S.D. 540.

Ordinary legal remedies

Where devisee of specific realty named as executor with power to sell realty qualified as executor and sold the realty from residuary estate, and during administration of estate applied estate's funds to his own use for which he was surcharged, and on becoming insolvent his surety paid the amount of surcharge, and was subrogated to rights of the estate, the surety was limited to the ordinary legal remedies to enforce payment and was not entitled to a lien on the devise for amount of funds so used on theory that executor by applying to his own use funds belonging to the estate thereby elected to receive to that extent payment of his devise in money instead of the realty.—Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v. Stout, 2 N.W.2d 315, 140 Neb. 859.

Deed of trust released by misappropriated funds

Surety on administrator's bond, having been required to repay estate funds misappropriated by administrator and used to pay administrator's note and secure a release of deed of trust on land securing note, was entitled to be subrogated to rights of holder of deed of trust against land without pursuing any other remedy.—Brown v. Offset release⁷⁴ or who has made payment to one having no authority to discharge his liability to the beneficiary;⁷⁵ or against a fund which has been provided by a third person to pay the debt of the principal,⁷⁶ the makers of a note which has been given to repay the estate for trust property previously converted by the principal,⁷⁷ a person to whom the principal has transferred the trust assets under an agreement by the former to discharge the claims against such assets;⁷⁸ or, as shown supra § 54 e, against a third person participating in a breach of trust by the fiduciary.

The surety on bond of national bank president as committee for incompetent, after making loss good, became subrogated to estate's claim against bank based on bank's imput-

Where a surety on a guardian's bond is compelled to make good a loss to the property of the ward which is in excess of the value thereof, and by doing so makes the estate of the ward whole in such respect, under these circumstances the surety is subrogated to all rights and interests of the ward in such property.⁷⁹ If the surety's principal is the real defaulter, and the party primarily responsible for a conversion or loss of funds, the surety will not be subrogated to such rights as the beneficiary might have against an innocent co-fiduciary who did not participate in the default, but is liable to the beneficiary simply because of negligent inattention to duty.⁸⁰

Where a fund bequeathed in trust to a minor was by the executor turned over to the minor's guardian who dissipated it, and the surety on the guardian's bond paid the amount to the ward on settlement of the guardian's account and took an assignment of all rights of the legatee against the executor, the surety by subrogation acquired all the rights of the legatee against the guardian, but is not entitled, either under the right of subrogation or under the assignment, to compel the executor again to pay the legacy.⁸¹

Subrogation to rights of principal. A fiduciary's surety will generally be subrogated to such rights as the principal has to obtain reimbursement,⁸² and to his claim for compensation from the estate;⁸³ but if, because of his misappropriations, the principal is barred from claiming reimbursement from the estate, the surety is likewise barred.⁸⁴ Where a surety on the bond of a trustee is compelled to make good a loss resulting when the trustee committed a breach of trust in the investment of trust funds, the surety, on payment of all moneys due the trust estate, will be subrogated to the pretended investments as existing prior to their repudiation,⁸⁵ and will be entitled to have the benefit of liens discharged by the investments.⁸⁶

§ 61. — Sureties on Bonds in Judicial Proceedings

A surety who becomes bound in judicial proceedings will generally be subrogated to all rights which the creditor has acquired by virtue of the proceedings, and to the principal's rights against third persons who are primarily liable and bound to indemnify him.

A surety who becomes bound in judicial proceedings will generally be subrogated to all rights which the creditor has acquired against the principal by virtue of the proceedings in which the surety became bound,⁸⁷ and will, likewise be subrogated

ed knowledge of conversion by president as committee, and such claim could be used by surety as an offset, dollar for dollar, against claim which receiver of bank had against surety under separate bond indemnifying bank against loss caused by dishonesty of bank employees, the amount of offset allowable being the actual amount which surety was required to pay by law to the incompetent's estate, including both principal and interest.—Federal Deposit Ins. Copincipal not responsible for misappropriation to his rights against third persons,⁸⁸ and to other rights and remedies in connection with the debt,⁸⁹ including, unless there are intervening equities which have been created before the surety became bound, liens or securities which have originally been given the creditor to secure the original debt.⁹⁰ Such a surety will also be subrogated to the principal's rights against third persons who are primarily liable and bound to indemnify him.⁹¹ It has been held, however, that statutes relating to the assignment of judgments against a principal and surety to the surety, and issuance of execution thereon, apply only to sureties directly and concurrently liable to suit with their principal, who have been sued and had judgment rendered against them, and not to sureties executing a replevin bond in an ac-

Bail in criminal cases. Apparently, on grounds of public policy, sureties on bail bonds in criminal cases will not be subrogated to the government's remedies for collecting the penalty from the principal.⁹³ A surety who has paid the amount of a judgment obtained by the United States on a bail bond is not entitled to invoke a state statute to maintain a claim in the same proceeding against a cosurety for contribution.⁹⁴

Appeal bonds. The doctrine of subrogation applies to sureties on an appeal bond. They may pay the judgment affirmed against their principal and be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of appellee,⁹⁵ or subrogated to all the rights and reme-

Where surety became liable to legatees under will of testator who made bequests to legatees to be paid out of assets of corporation, the stock of which he devised to other parties, on bond surety gave for dissolution of injunction restraining disposal of assets of corporation, surety could not recover on ground of subrogation to rights of legatees from innocent corporate stockholders who, at time corporation was not in default in payments to legatees sold their stock to parties who acquired all stock of corporation and fraudulently sold corporate assets, especially where surety by giving bond made the fraud possible; and he could not recover amount paid legatees, from executors of will on ground executors should have established trust fund for payment of legacies, where will did not impose such duty on executors who were not requested to establish such a fund.—*U. Surety on appeal bond of indemnitor not subrogated to creditor's rights against one whom principal was bound to indemnify see supra § 59 b.

Compliance with statutory procedure

Where surety on appeal bond followed procedure specified by statute for undertaking on appeal after payment of judgment affirmed on appeal, his failure to file notice and claim of contribution under statute dealing generally with sureties did not prevent subrogation against judgment debtor, since specific statutes control general.—Cozad v. Raisch Improvement Co., 32 P.2d 133, 220 Cal. 657.

Payment held not voluntary

Where employee who recovered judgment against employer entered satisfaction in full as to insurer after insurer paid lesser amount under employer's liability policy, insurer who became surety on appeal bond and paid balance of judgment after affirmation on appeal was not volunteer so as to prevent subrogation to rights of employee for balance paid against judgment debtor.—Cozad v. Raisch Improvement Co., supra.

edies of the principal for contribution.⁹⁶ The sureties may recover from their principal the amount paid on the judgment, on affirmance, although such payment was made before the mandate of the appellate court was sent to the lower court.⁹⁷ Where coprincipals on an appeal bond are sureties for each other, the right of subrogation exists between them.⁹⁸ Where sureties on a supersedeas bond executed by an executor or administrator pay the judgment on affirmance, they can only recover against property devised or bequeathed by being subrogated to the rights of the representative, who can only recover as for an original deficiency of assets, and not for a deficiency caused by his own want of diligence and prudent administration.⁹⁹

The right of the sureties to subrogation does not arise until actual payment of the judgment, the mere seizure of property on execution of the judgment being insufficient.¹ Moreover, a surety for a joint tort-feasor on a bond on appeal to stay execution, who was also the insurer of such tort-feasor on a policy of liability insurance and as such was liable to satisfy the judgment against the insured and other joint tort-feasors, is not entitled, on satisfying the judgment on its affirmance, to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor against the tort-feasors who were not insured and who gave no stay bond on appeal.² A surety on a supersedeas bond who pays a decree entered on appeal which expressly supersedes and sets aside the decree entered at the trial is not subrogated to the lien of the original decree of the trial court.³

§ 62. Indemnitors of Sureties

An indemnitor of a surety compelled to satisfy the surety's liability will be subrogated to his rights.

An indemnitor of a surety compelled to satisfy the liability of the surety will be subrogated to all rights to which the surety would have been subrogated.⁴

IV. ESTABLISHMENT AND ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHT

§ 63. In General

Subrogation is a right of action only which must be established by a judicial proceeding.

The doctrine of subrogation is not self-executing,⁵ and a person by payment does not ipso facto become subrogated to the rights of the creditor;⁶ he acquires only a right to a subrogation⁷ which must be actively asserted before subrogation can actually take place.⁸ The right of substitution and the intention, express or implied, to enforce the right must concur to make a case for subrogation.⁹

Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., supra.

Subrogation is a right of action only¹⁰ which must be established by a judicial proceeding¹¹ in which two distinct sets of facts are involved, that is, those which show the right to be subrogated and those which show that the claim to which subrogation is had may be enforced against the principal.¹² However, where the right to subrogation is given by statute, the subrogee is subrogated to all the rights of the creditor by vigor of the law and he is not dependent on any judicial proceeding.¹³

§ 64. Nature and Form of Remedy

A right of subrogation is properly a matter of equitable cognizance, but in some jurisdictions and under some statutes it may be enforced at law. It may be enforced by independent or subordinate or ancillary proceedings, and in a proper case may be asserted by a plea or answer, or by cross petition or bill.

A right of subrogation is properly a matter of equitable cognizance¹⁴ and originally was exclusively so,¹⁵ but, although in many jurisdictions its enforcement is confined to equitable tribunals,¹⁶ in other jurisdictions it is now recognized and enforced at law as well as in equity,¹⁷ and the doctrine is as applicable to suits in admiralty as to actions at law.¹⁸ In some jurisdictions a distinction is made between the establishment of the right and its enforcement,¹⁹ it being held that, when the right of subrogation is in question, the remedy is in equity,²⁰ but, when the right itself is conceded or established, and there remains to be enforced only the right of realizing the value of the subject matter, such right may be within the cognizance of a court of law.²¹

If the right of action to which the subrogee is subrogated is legal, it is enforceable at law;²² if it is equitable he must sue in equity.²³ In some states statutory and code provisions exist prescribing the mode of enforcing the right in particular cases and allow its enforcement at law,²⁴ and relief may be had at law where the equity and law procedure are blended.²⁵ One who is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of another and to enforce such an equity as he may have cannot do so by means of an action for breach of warranty against him in which a personal judgment is demanded.²⁶

Probate jurisdiction. In at least one jurisdiction, where the estate of a deceased is involved, relief by way of subrogation may be granted in a probate court.²⁷ In other jurisdictions it may not,²⁸ and in still another jurisdiction, without deciding as to the propriety of relief in probate, it has been held unnecessary for one claiming subrogation under a mortgage against the land of a deceased to present his claim in a probate court, but he may bring his action in equity by virtue of his equitable claim and lien, without invoking the aid of the administrator or the probate court.²⁹

Independent or subordinate or ancillary proceedings. A court of equity having jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties may grant relief by way of subrogation without compelling the party entitled to it to resort to a separate proceeding.³⁰ So it has been held that one entitled to subrogation may adopt the proceeding of the creditor to whose right he is subrogated,³¹ and one who has paid a judgment as surety before the question of his suretyship has been determined may have that relation established by applying to the court that rendered the original judgment, and become thus subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor.³²

However, the right of a surety to subrogation need not be determined in the suit between the creditor and the principal.³³ Where the issue of subrogation is not raised prior to the rendition of judgment, such relief cannot be obtained by motion filed subsequent thereto, but relief must be sought in an independent action.³⁴ Where the surety on an appeal bond has paid a decree, a proceeding by him in aid of an execution levied in another county cannot be regarded as a supplemental bill so as to relieve it from the necessity of being filed in the county where the land affected lies and where defendants reside.³⁵ An insurer of an owner against loss because of injuries sustained by reason of ownership of the premises, whose offer to pay judgments against owner and lessee for injuries sustained on assignment of the judgments was refused by the injured persons, is entitled to a temporary injunction restraining the injured persons from issu-character of judgment to be rendered, was to enable the surety to protect his rights when property of principal was about to get beyond the reach of the surety.—Cornett's Ex'r v. Rice, 187 S.W.2d 454, 299 Ky. 256, 160 A.L.R. 413.

Execution after judgment

The statute entitling surety who pays judgment on surety bond to repayment from principal was intended to provide convenient method of procedure to enable debtor, holding right of judgment, to claim and execute for the whole or proportion of judgment to which such debtor might be entitled. The statute gives to the surety the remedy of using the judgment itself as a summary proceeding instead of seeking relief by slow and burdensome steps to the same end, and, where execution after judgment has been resorted to as a proceeding under doctrine of subrogation for mere purpose of reimbursement, a separate action on assignment of the judgment or in assumption would be an idle act.—Painter v. Berglund, 87 P.2d 360, 31 Cal.App.2d 63.

ing execution against him pending his action to have his rights against the lessee determined.³⁶

Assertion by way of defense. In a jurisdiction in which a right to subrogation may be asserted in an action at law it may be urged by a plea in an action at law³⁷ or by a cross petition therein,³⁸ or by a cross bill in a suit in equity.³⁹ A right to subrogation may be raised by an answer in foreclosure proceedings,⁴⁰ but it has been held that a cross bill rather than an answer is the proper pleading by which a defendant should seek relief by subrogation against an intervening statutory lien which plaintiff is seeking to enforce.⁴¹ A codefendant may present his claim for exoneration by the other defendants in a cross bill.⁴²

§ 65. Conditions Precedent

Compliance with requirements of conditions precedent is necessary, but as a general rule the surety is not bound to exhaust his remedies against the principal before seeking the benefits of subrogation, and he may, without first proceeding at law, file his bill in equity for subrogation.

Demand on the person whose liability is sought to be fixed by subrogation is not necessary before suit,⁴³ and, in the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁴⁴ notice of payment need not be made.⁴⁵ As a general rule the surety is not bound to exhaust his remedies against the principal before seeking the benefits of subrogation.⁴⁶ He may, without first proceeding at law, file his bill in equity for subrogation,⁴⁷ on notice to the principal.⁴⁸ Where, although subrogation is sought, complainant's rights are primarily based on a decree rescinding an alleged fraudulent act, the restoration of the status

Tender. In the application of the rule that, under some circumstances, payment need not be made by the subrogee before he may enforce his right to subrogation, as discussed supra § 10, it has been held that, where the amount due is uncertain, plaintiff may come into a court of equity and ask that it be ascertained and that on payment of the amount found he be subrogated without making a tender prior to the commencement of the action.⁵⁰ So, where the rights of the parties may be fully protected without the necessity of the money's being brought into court, it may be sufficient for plaintiff to aver his readiness and ability to pay and tender payment of the amount due in his bill.⁵¹

§ 66. Time to Sue, Limitations, and Laches

Where the creditor refuses to recognize a right to subrogation and the rights of innocent third persons may intervene, the person claiming subrogation may proceed at once to have his rights established. The right may be barred by the statute of limitations, and laches in taking advantage of the right will forfeit it.

ministrator to subrogation to his rights against distributees may be worked out only on a final decree of distribution.⁵⁴

Where the wife redeems from a mortgage real estate in which she has an inchoate right of dower, she may be entitled to the note which is the primary obligation of her husband and to the mortgage, and may have a right of present enforcement in equity if necessary to protect the rights of the parties.⁵⁵

Limitations. The right of subrogation, like other rights of action, is barred by failure to take steps to enforce it within the time prescribed by the statute of limitations.⁵⁶ However, the statute of limitations will not affect the right of a purchaser at a judicial sale, declared to be void at the instance of the heir of the former owner, to be subrogated to the rights of those creditors whose debts were paid by the purchase money.⁵⁷

In some jurisdictions the right to subrogation is not regarded as barred until the bar of the obligation which claimant asserts the right to be subrogated to and the period of limitation as to the rights of a subrogee is that which is applicable to the security to which he became subrogated in the hands of the original creditor,⁵⁸ and it is not material that the subrogee's right of action at law against the person primarily liable shall have been barred.⁵⁹ Under the rule that the right to subrogation is regarded as barred by the period of limitations applicable to actions on implied undertakings, as discussed in Limitation of Actions § 69, a surety on a note who pays the same and takes an assignment thereof may sue the principal thereon if it is not barred, although his right of action on the implied promise for reimbursement is barred by the statute of limitations,⁶⁰ but a statute giving a surety the legal right to demand an assignment from the creditor on the payment of the debt does not ipso facto work an assignment, and, where the surety's right to reimbursement is barred by limitation before he demands an assignment, he cannot thereafter defeat the statute of limitations by taking an assignment and seeking to enforce the rights of the creditor.⁶¹

Laches. The right of subrogation is one of equity merely, and due diligence must be exercised in ascertaining it, and laches in taking advantage of the right will forfeit it⁶² as against the rights of third persons which have intervened.⁶³ Subrogation is not allowed in favor of one who has permitted the equity he asserts to sleep in secrecy until the rights of others would be injuriously affected by its assertion and enforcement.⁶⁴ Thus, a surety who for an unreasonably long time has permitted himself to appear in the light of the principal debtor cannot be subrogated, to the prejudice of intervening equities.⁶⁵

However, lapse of time alone is not generally sufficient to sustain the defense of laches.⁶⁶ Delay that works a disadvantage is necessary⁶⁷ and laches will not defeat subrogation where it would be inequitable to deny it.⁶⁸ It is only where injustice will be done that the court declines to interfere on the ground of laches,⁶⁹ so that mere delay will not bar the right to subrogation if the position of the party as against whom subrogation is claimed has not been altered to its disadvantage;⁷⁰ and, where the rights of third persons have not intervened, it has been held that a delay, short of the statutory period of limitations, will not bar a party of his right to be subrogated to the rights of another.⁷¹ Full knowledge of all the facts concurring with a delay for an unreasonable time are essential elements of the defense of laches.⁷² If there is no such obscurity in the transaction and no such loss of evidence as would be likely to produce injustice, there is no laches defeating the right to subrogation.⁷³ A creditor is not entitled to subrogation to a lien which, but for his own laches, he might have had.⁷⁴

§ 67. Parties

General rules as to parties in civil actions apply in proceedings to enforce subrogation; and the right of subrogation cannot be enforced in proceedings to which those whose equities are affected are not parties.

The right of subrogation cannot be enforced in proceedings to which those whose equities are affected are not parties,⁷⁵ but ordinarily persons against whom no relief is sought and who will not be affected by the proceedings are not necessary parties thereto.⁷⁶ Although in some jurisdictions it is held that creditors to whose rights a party seeks to be subrogated are necessary parties to an action to obtain such subrogation,⁷⁷ in other jurisdictions the person to whose rights another seeks to be subrogated is not always a necessary party in a proceeding to that end. If the rights of the creditors will be affected by the proceedings, they must be made parties thereto,⁷⁸ but a creditor who has been fully paid and to whose rights plaintiff is seeking subrogation is not a necessary party;⁷⁹ and, where a pro tanto subrogee seeks to enforce his security subject to the rights of the creditor thereunder, it has been held that such creditor is not a necessary party to the proceedings.⁸⁰

In whose name suit brought. At common law, in an action to enforce subrogation, the subrogee is neither a proper nor a necessary party plaintiff, but he is required to sue in the name of the creditor.⁸¹

Under statutes requiring an action to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, a subrogee who brings an action at law to recover the right to which he is subrogated has the right to sue in his own name,⁸² although it may be brought on behalf of the subrogee, in the name of the legal plaintiff.⁸³ A statute allowing an assignee of a chose in action to sue in his own name has been held not applicable to suits in equity to enforce a right of subrogation.⁸⁴ In a law court, independent of statute, where subrogation applies, suit must be brought in the name of the person whose real rights are being litigated.⁸⁵ A subrogee is not entitled to sue in his own name where he does not discharge all of the obligation, but only part of it;⁸⁶ and apart from statute, the indemnitor's right by subrogation to stand in the place of his indemnitee, who is entitled to a part only of the proceeds of a single cause of action, does not carry with it any authority to maintain the action in his own name.⁸⁷

Joinder. Cosureties may maintain a joint bill in equity to enforce their right of subrogation,⁸⁸ they may be properly joined as plaintiffs,⁸⁹ and they need not join, as defendants, those against whom they are not seeking to assert any right.⁹⁰ Guarantors of notes, which after payment the holders assigned to them jointly, can bring a joint action thereon against the maker whether the funds with which the notes were discharged were individual funds of the several guarantors, or owned jointly by them.⁹¹ After there has been a partial subrogation, the subrogees may join with others in bringing action.⁹²

Person against whom there may be recovery over. Under a statute providing that, when a defendant will have a right of action against a third person for the amount of the recovery against him, such third person may be made a party defendant, a defendant liable for injuries to plaintiff is entitled to have a physician whose negligent treatment of the injury prevented a complete cure made a party defendant.⁹³

§ 68. Pleading

The pleadings of one claiming a right to subrogation should clearly and distinctly state the facts which give rise to the right claimed, and should conform to the general rules of pleading in civil actions.

The right of subrogation presents a justiciable issue, which should be made up and brought to the attention of the court by proper and orderly pleading.⁹⁴ Ordinarily, subrogation in order to be available must be pleaded by the party claiming it.⁹⁵ As in other actions, every intendment is to be made against the pleader in an action for subrogation.⁹⁶

Prior to enactment of real party in interest statute, a person who acquired whole of a cause of action by equitable subrogation could have brought suit on the chose in action only in name of person from whom such interest had been acquired.—*Verdier v. Rule gives plaintiff, and not the court, the right of choice to determine whether a subrogee shall become plaintiff in the action, and to that extent modifies the mandatory provision that the action must be prosecuted by the real party in interest, and the proper interpretation of rule is to be determined by considering the object to be attained, the removal of the prejudice which had formerly resulted to insurance companies acquiring subrogation rights by reason of their payment of claims.—*Levin v. Silence as to liens

Where complaint by surety against contractor was silent as to existence of any liens against property involved, it could not be assumed that any liens had been filed.—American Sur. Co. of New York v. Tannhauser,

A person seeking subrogation should ask for such relief in his pleading,⁹⁷ but it is held that, although a party does not specifically claim the right of subrogation, equity will grant the relief, where it is justified by the facts alleged and established,⁹⁸ under a prayer for general relief.⁹⁹ Also, in an equitable action, if the allegations of the bill show the equities of the parties, subrogation will be applied in favor of a defendant who has not asked for it, where to fail so to do would result in giving plaintiff more than that to which he has shown himself to be equitably entitled.¹

or petition to establish and enforce a right of subrogation should clearly and distinctly state the facts which give rise to the right claimed.² Whether plaintiff seeks his remedy by original or supplemental bill is a mere matter of form not affecting the remedy.³ The pleading must show the right of the person to whose rights subrogation is sought to the lien or thing, the benefit of which is claimed by the subrogee;⁴ it must allege a relationship of the parties out of which the right of subrogation might arise;⁵ it must also allege payment of the debt,⁶ and aver facts showing that in making payment the subrogee was not a mere volunteer;⁷ nor

(4) Although the presumption would be that services rendered by a son to his mother were rendered voluntarily and, therefore, would not support a claim of conventional subrogation to mother's rights against deceased father's estate, son suing for conventional subrogation was required only to allege sufficient facts to indicate that both parties intended that compensation should be made, and to negative idea that services were performed merely because of a natural sense of duty or affection arising out of the relationship.—Bleckley v. can plaintiff be subrogated to the rights of a defendant under a contract with a third person in an action in which the terms of the contract are not alleged.⁸

The petition need not anticipate defenses.⁹ Thus, the subrogee need not allege that he has not been repaid.¹⁰ Immaterial or unnecessary matters need not be alleged.¹¹ The sufficiency of the complaint must be judged from the pleading as a whole.¹² Where a subrogee continues an action in the name of plaintiff, he is bound by the original plaintiff's complaint.¹³ Plaintiff may be granted leave to amend his complaint.¹⁴

A statute providing that a suit brought by a subrogee may be either in his name or for his use if the subrogee shall in his pleading allege on oath that he is the actual bona fide subrogee and set forth how and when he became such applies to a suit in the name of the original owner for the use of the subrogee.¹⁵

Plea or answer. Ordinarily defensive matter must be set up by answer or plea;¹⁶ and, where the right to subrogation is sought by defendant, his plea or answer must contain allegations sufficient to warrant his claim.¹⁷

Issues, proof, and variance. An action to enforce the right of subrogation contemplates the making up of an issue, either of law or of fact, the same as in other actions.¹⁸ Evidence not excluded by any rule or principle of law may be introduced if it

Waiver of right to subrogation

In suit on notes and for foreclosure of mortgage wherein holder of mortgage intervened and plaintiff relied on doctrine of subrogation to extent of payments made on notes secured by mortgage held by intervener, failure of intervener to plead waiver of right to subrogation by taking of new mortgage was unnecessary to entitle intervener to prevail, since, when equitable jurisdiction is properly invoked, court should administer complete relief on all questions raised by evidence, regardless of whether they are pleaded.—Deems v. Milligan, 64 P.2d 701, 179 Okl. 25.

Contract

(1) In suit by testator's son to be subrogated to his mother's rights against estate on ground that mother had agreed that son should be compensated for caring for her by payment of her annuity to him, son was not required to allege a contract with testator or with any legal representative of his estate for performance of services to his mother, or that mother by a written or an express contract agreed to compensate him for services.—Bleckley v. Bleckley, 5 S.E.2d 206, 189 Ga. 47.

(2) In suit for conventional subrogation, plaintiff was not required to allege that contract relied on was in writing, since an agreement for subrogation need not be in writing.—Bleckley v. Bleckley, supra.

Laches and wrongful conduct

An action by surety on fidelity bond of treasurer of one county against another county was an action at law and, hence, surety was not required to explain long lapse of time between earliest embezzlement and date of suit, but defendant was required to plead that surety was chargeable with laches, and, where such other county was put on notice concerning employment of trust funds, its conduct was prima facie wrongful and, hence, county was required to present affirmative defense.

—American Sur. Co. of New York v. Multnomah County, 138 P.2d 597, 171 Or. 287, 148 A.L.R. 926.

General denial insufficient

In second mortgagee's suit for equitable subrogation to first mortgage, where complainant pleads absence of notice or knowledge of intervening encumbrance, intervening encumbrancer's general denial is insufficient.—Whitson v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 142 So. 564, 225 Ala. 262.

17. Answer held sufficient

Answer alleging that life tenant paid from his own funds purchase-money notes secured by security deed to realty and obtained an assignment of notes and security deed and that he had not agreed to make such payments as part of consideration for conveyance of life estate to him was sufficient to show that life tenant was entitled to be subrogated to rights of his assignors at time of assignment and to assert a lien against the realty for payments made.—Cordell v. Cordell, 56 S.E.2d 251, 206 Ga. 214.

In trespass to try title suit to recover undivided half interest in land in which defendant's pleadings were limited to an answer to plaintiffs' action and contained only a general denial, a plea of not guilty, and a pleading of various statutes of limitation, defendant could not claim to be an "innocent purchaser for value" of the superior title of bank holding vendor's lien note on the property so as to enable defendant thereby to assert right to "subrogation."—Downing v. Jeffrey, Tex.Civ. App., 178 S.W.2d 241, error refused.

tends to support or controvert an issue made by the pleadings.¹⁹ Defendants must be permitted to make such defenses to the enforcement of the rights obtained as would have been allowed if the creditor were suing in his own right.²⁰ No facts are properly in issue unless charged in the bill.²¹ The person seeking subrogation must not only allege, but must also prove, the facts entitling him thereto.²² Proof must conform to the pleadings,²³ and no proof can be made of facts not charged.²⁴

§ 69. Evidence

The burden of proof is on the subrogee to establish his right, and the rules as to the admissibility and weight and sufficiency of evidence applicable in civil actions generally apply to proceedings to enforce subrogation.

The burden of proof is on the would-be subrogee to establish his right,²⁵ and on defendant against whom subrogation is sought to establish matters of affirmative defense relied on.²⁶ Where the subrogee establishes a prima facie case, the burden of proof shifts to defendant.²⁷ Where an action is one at law, in which no equitable relief in aid of the claim is prayed, the subrogee does not have the burden of showing the superior equity as against defendant in order to recover.²⁸

When the person who is interested in the fulfillment of the obligation pays, subrogation may be presumed;²⁹ and, where a loan on insurance policies is obtained from a source other than the lender, and the proceeds of the policies are used to discharge the debt, a presumption in favor of subrogation of the beneficiary to the right of the lender against the borrower's estate arises.³⁰ It is held that, where a stranger to an obligation pays a part of the whole of the debt, there is a presumption that the transaction was a purchase of the debt and accompanying security to the extent of the payment;³¹ and, where the original notes are indorsed and delivered to the guarantors on payment by them of the debt guaranteed, it must be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that they are the owners of the notes.³² It is also held that, if the person paying the debt relies on other security, he is presumed not to expect, or to be entitled to, subrogation.³³

Payments of notes made by the real owner of the equity raise the presumption that the money was intended as payment as against the contention that the notes were purchased,³⁴ but the ostensible purchase of notes, if doubtful, is presumably a purchase, and not payment.³⁵ As regards a creditor's right of subrogation, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is presumed that liens on property owned by defendant and another are discharged from income from the property.³⁶ It is presumed that collateral general in character and applicable to all debts of the principal debtor is what it purports to be.³⁷ Sureties will not be assumed to have intended to waive their right of subrogation.³⁸ Various other presumptions have been considered in actions by subrogees to establish and enforce their right of subrogation.³⁹

Admissibility. The rules as to admissibility of evidence applicable in civil actions generally apply to proceedings to enforce subrogation.⁴⁰

Weight and sufficiency. General rules apply as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in proceedings for subrogation.⁴¹

39. Intent to keep obligation alive

Three out of four comakers paying notes after payee instituted action thereon and having notes transferred to their nominee to whose use the action was assigned would be presumed to have intended to keep the obligation alive, as against contention that the three comakers paid notes with intent to discharge the notes.—Lit Bros., to Use of Kaplan, v. Goodman, 18 A.2d 519, 144 Pa.Super. 43.

Possession through mistaken delivery

Where administrator's bill was based on theory that his intestate as surety on notes secured by mortgage paid indebtedness and was subrogated to rights and remedies of mortgagee, if administrator mistakenly delivered notes to defendant, possession thus obtained would not suffice to create presumption in defendant's favor.—McGlaughn v. Pearman, 18 So.2d 80, 245 Ala. 524.

Settlement

Where third party tort-feasors before making settlement with firemen for injuries sustained by firemen knew that firemen had received from town under municipal law benefits for such injuries, it might be presumed that settlement did not include any part of payments, made by town, so as to entitle town and its indemnity insurer to recover, out of settlement, amount paid by town to firemen, on theory of equitable subrogation.—Employers' Liability Assur. Corp., Limited, of London, England,

(2) Where subrogee did not establish by preponderance of evidence that he paid for his own account, and not for account of another, he could not prevail.—Shaw v. Wells, La. App., 17 So.2d 387.

(3) Surety was not entitled to recover amount paid where testimony relied on to show liability was uncertain, indefinite, and unsatisfactory.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Citizens Nat. Bank of Lubbock, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 113, error dismissed.

(4) Subrogation to rights of mortgagee is an appropriate remedy available to third person who has paid mortgage indebtedness on behalf of mortgagor, provided payment of mortgage is sustained by proper degree of proof.—Jones v. Remley, Ohio App., 75 N.E.2d 179.

Prima facie evidence

A decree in favor of town against town collector and his sureties for collector's defalcation was prima facie evidence of facts therein recited in subsequent suit by sureties, who had satisfied decree, based on their right to become subrogated to rights of the town.—State Bank & Trust Co. v. Interpretation of decree

A decree providing that surety on bond which insolvent national bank had executed to qualify as a depository for funds of bankrupt estates be subrogated to any remaining dividends paid or to be paid by bank's receiver on claims filed with him by bankruptcy trustees had to be interpreted as adjudicating no greater right to dividends than sound legal principles would permit, and surety, which paid trustees' claims in full, could not obtain by subrogation dividends which were not paid and could not be paid to them, since when claims were paid trustees' right to collect dividends ceased.—Maryland Cas. Co. v. Cox, C.C.A.Tenn., 104 F.2d 354.

Where engineering and legal services were wrongfully paid out of bond or special improvement fund instead of general fund of drainage district, and actions were brought for benefit of district against officers and sureties, the judgment against defendants

rogation against the principal;⁴⁷ and, where the subrogee pays off the debt for which he is bound, during the prosecution of an action by the creditor, he may ask the court to render judgment for him instead of for the creditor;⁴⁸ but, where the right demanded is disputed by other parties to the action having adverse interests, the court will go no further than to direct the subrogation on such terms as may be justified, leaving the conflicting claims to be determined by future adjudication.⁴⁹ Also, where the principal has been discharged in bankruptcy, the court will not provide in the judgment for subrogation of the surety against the principal.⁵⁰ A subrogee is ordinarily entitled to recover interest on the sum involved from the date of payment,⁵¹ although, under particular circumstances, such right has been denied.⁵²

A creditor who obtains a judgment against several defendants, by one of whom it is paid, cannot interfere to prevent a decree of subrogation in favor of the party paying against the other defendants for that portion of the debt which they should pay.⁵³ The recovery of a money judgment in an action to enforce a right of subrogation is merely incidental to the subrogation.⁵⁴

Generally, a pro tanto subrogation will not be decreed,⁵⁵ but it will be decreed where justice requires.⁵⁶

§ 72. Review

It has been held that subrogation, being an equitable remedy, can be properly reviewed in higher courts only by appeal.

It has been held that subrogation, being an equitable remedy, can be properly reviewed in higher courts only by appeal,⁵⁷ and the proceedings therein should be in analogy to equity practice, as by petition and answer and not on mere notice.⁵⁸

SUBSCRIBE. While the word "subscribe," which is derived from the Latin words "sub" and "scribo,"¹ has a well-defined meaning,² its significance when used in written instruments frequently must be sought in the context and attendant circumstances.³

The strict definition of the word "subscribe" involves the idea of a written signature,⁴ and the term ordinarily means the signing of one's own name,⁵ although this is not its necessary and universal signification,⁶ since frequently the term has reference to the place of signature rather than to the manner thereof.⁷

The primary⁸ and literal⁹ meaning of the word "subscribe" is to write under;¹⁰ to write underneath,¹¹ as one's name;¹² to write the name un-

Thus, primarily,¹⁶ and as popularly employed,¹⁷ the word "subscribe," when applied to the act of signing one's name to an instrument in writing,¹⁸ that is, a printed or written instrument,¹⁹ means,²⁰ and is limited to,²¹ a signature beneath²² or at the end²³ of the instrument; that is, the signature must be at the end of the instrument, rather than at some other place.²⁴

Since the strict definition of the word "subscribe" involves the idea of a written signature, as stated supra note 4, the term frequently is defined as meaning to set one's hand to a writing;²⁵ to sign

In order to make a good subscribing witness, it is requisite that he should sign his name to the instrument himself, at the time of its execution, and at the request or with the assent of the party.⁵³ The witness need not be present at the moment of execution, and if he is called in by the parties immediately afterwards and told that it is their deed or agreement and requested to sign his name as a witness, that will be enough, since the execution by the parties and the subscription by the witness are then considered as parts of the same transaction.⁵⁴

Except as statutes have changed or modified the rule, it is held generally that in the case of attested instruments proof of execution or authenticity must be made by the subscribing witnesses if available, see Evidence § 739. Alteration of instrument as to subscribing witness see Alteration of Instruments § 27.

The law relating to subscribing witnesses is, to a large extent, in connection with the execution of testamentary instruments, and thus is treated throughout the title Wills; and for specific references see the index to that title and consult the Descriptive-Word Index.

—Subscribed. It has been said that the word "subscribed," which is derived from the Latin "subscribo,"⁵⁵ literally⁵⁶ and according to its derivation,⁵⁷ means to write beneath;⁵⁸ to write under⁵⁹ or underneath.⁶⁰ It involves a writing,⁶¹ and in its habitual use, and according to both its popular and literary signification, is limited to a signature at the end of a printed or written instrument,⁶² and in its technical⁶³ sense means signed at the bottom;⁶⁴ signed underneath.⁶⁵

It has a secondary meaning which is purely metaphorical, denoting the consent, assent, or promise thus conveyed, without reference to the external mode of expressing it,⁶⁶ but this secondary sense is excluded when actual writing is spoken of, and applies only when the word is used as a neuter or intransitive verb, accompanied by the preposition "to."⁶⁷

"Subscribed" has been held synonymous with "executed" see 33 C.J.S. p 120 note 31, and it has been distinguished from "attested" see 7 C.J.S. p 692 note 40.1, and "issued" see 48 C.J.S. p 778 note 15.

term is applied to a person who becomes bound by a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation as stated in Corporations § 283. The word "subscriber" is also applied to a person who enters his name for a paper, book, map, or the like.⁷¹

SUBSCRIPTION. The act of writing one's name under a written instrument; the affixing one's signature to any document, whether for the purpose of authenticating or attesting it, of adopting its terms as one's own expressions, or of binding one's self by an engagement which it contains.⁷² While the strict definition of the word "subscription" involves the idea of a written signature,⁷³ by common usage the term is often employed to include an agreement, written or oral, to give or pay some amount to a designated purpose, more usually perhaps, to some purpose for the promotion of which numerous persons are uniting their means and their efforts.⁷⁴

Thus term may be used in the sense of a making of a formal written promise.⁷⁵

It has been said that subscription is mechanical,⁷⁶ and the act of the hand,⁷⁷ as distinguished from attestation which is mental and the act of the senses, see 7 C.J.S. p 693 note 73.

Subscriptions as promises in writing by one or more persons to contribute money or other property absolutely, or conditionally, for purposes of a charitable, educational, religious, or other public nature are treated in Subscriptions § 1 et seq.

Subscriptions to the capital stock of a corporation are considered generally in Corporations §§ 282-387.

§ 1. Definition and Nature

A "subscription contract" or "subscription" has been defined as a written contract by which one engages to contribute a sum of money for a designated purpose gratuitously; but a subscription, in the absence of consideration, is regarded as a mere offer; furthermore, the promise need not be to pay money, but may be for the performance of other acts.

A "subscription contract" or "subscription," as it is often called, is defined as a written contract by which one engages to contribute a sum of money for a designated purpose gratuitously, as in the case of subscribing to a charity.¹ However, such a definition is too broad, since subscriptions need not be in writing, but may be oral, as discussed infra § 2, and the courts have considered a subscription, in the absence of consideration therefor, as a mere offer,² which becomes binding when accepted, as discussed infra § 4, or when the offerer is estopped to deny the validity of the promise, as discussed infra § 5 b (2). Furthermore, the promise need not be to pay money, but may be for the performance of other acts,³ as, for example, to give a note,⁴ to convey land,⁵ or to furnish labor and material.⁶

§ 2. Form and Contents

Although the nature and extent of the obligation of the subscription must be definite and certain, no particular formality is necessary to a contract of subscription, and it is not necessary that the payee be named in the subscription paper.

No particular formality is necessary to a contract of subscription,⁷ but any form or statement by which an intent to effect such an agreement or contract appears is sufficient.⁸ In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, and subject to the limitations imposed on oral contracts generally by the statute of frauds, subscriptions need not be in writing, but may be oral.⁹ The subscription contract may consist of separate sheets or documents if they are properly related.¹⁰ The writing must be more than a mere proposal contemplating further proceedings,¹¹ although a promise to pay "at my convenience" was held not unenforceable as an illusory promise,¹² but to constitute a promise in effect to pay when the promisor was able, when payment was convenient or opportune or could be made without difficulty, discomfort, trouble, or personal inconvenience.¹³

Certainty and definiteness. As in the case of contracts generally, the nature and extent of the obligation of a subscription contract must be certain and definite.¹⁵ A promise to pay an amount not stated or determinable is too indefinite.¹⁶

Designation of payee. It is not necessary that the payee should be named in the subscription paper; it is sufficient if there is an acceptance by the party intended;¹⁷ and it is not necessary that the payee have been in existence at the time the subscription was made.¹⁸ In the absence of a designated payee there can be no recovery by a person or corporation which was not contemplated as payee.¹⁹ The beneficiary may appoint an agent to whom notes for subscriptions may be made payable.²⁰

Subscription in aid of railroad. A subscription or contribution, made merely for the purpose of aiding a railroad company and not in exchange for stock, is not subject to statutory provisions relating to subscriptions to stock of the company.²¹ Furthermore, a committee of subscribers representing the whole number in offering aid to a railroad company, or agents acting therein for the subscribers, have only such authority as is conferred on them,²² and cannot go beyond their instructions.²³ So a committee or agent authorized to offer aid on certain terms has no power to bind the subscribers to any other terms.²⁴ However, an agent given discretionary power to make a contract with a railroad company on such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the subscribers has power to bind them to furnish depot grounds and a right of way.²⁵

§ 3. Execution and Delivery

- a. Execution
- b. Delivery

a. Execution

The subscriber's name may be signed to the contract by the solicitor of the subscription where the subscriber authorized the signing. Revenue stamps must be affixed as required.

The subscription paper need not be signed by the payee,²⁶ and the signing of the subscriber's name by the solicitor of the subscription is sufficient to create a valid subscription contract where the subscriber authorized the signing.²⁷ Furthermore, in so far as a person may transact business under a name other than his real name, the promisor need not use his real name in signing a subscription contract.²⁸

Affixing revenue stamps. Where by reason of statutory provisions a subscription requires a revenue stamp, it is no objection to the validity of a subscription that a single stamp, sufficient to cover the aggregate amount of duties on all of several subscriptions on one page of a subscription book, was used instead of a separate stamp for each subscription.²⁹ In the case of a tax imposed by the United States, it has been held that the amount of stamps required on each sheet of a subscription to which he affixes and cancels stamps is determined conclusively by the internal revenue collector.³⁰

Although there must be an actual or constructive delivery of the subscription paper,³¹ a subscription is not of the class of agreements which requires a formal or particular delivery to the payee or beneficiary,³² since it is not necessary for the validity of the subscription that the payee have been in existence at the time of the subscription, as discussed supra § 2. While the subscriber may, before delivery of the subscription, withdraw therefrom even after signing it,³³ after delivery of the paper the subscription becomes a contract between the beneficiary and each of the subscribers,³⁴ although the mere delivery of a check to an institution which is engaged in activities both charitable and private and supported in part by the contributions of others does not result in an enforceable subscription contract.³⁵

Subscription in aid of railroad. Since the committee or agent authorized to offer aid on certain terms has no power to bind the subscribers to any other terms, as discussed supra § 2, the delivery of a subscription other than on the conditions on which such delivery was authorized is not binding on the subscribers.³⁶

§ 4. Acceptance

As in the case of contracts generally, it is essential that there should be an acceptance of the offered subscription.

Since a promise to pay a subscription is, in the absence of consideration therefor, a mere offer, as discussed supra § 1, it may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance.³⁷ As in the case of contracts generally, it is essential that there should be an acceptance of the offered subscription³⁸ within a reasonable time after the offer has been made,³⁹ although the acceptance need not be express; it may be implied,⁴⁰ as where liability or expense is incurred on the faith of the offer⁴¹ or the conditions stipulated are complied with.⁴² Nonacceptance may also be implied from the actions of the promisee.⁴³ It is not necessary that the subscriber should be notified that the subscription has been accepted,⁴⁴ although the contrary has been asserted.⁴⁵ However, if the subscription prescribes an express method of acceptance this requirement must be complied with.⁴⁶ A subscription solicited without previous authorization may be subsequently ratified and

Subscription in aid of railroad. A contract of subscription made in aid of a railroad company becomes binding, and the company becomes entitled to the money or other aid subscribed, when, and only when, it has accepted the contract.⁴⁸

§ 5. Consideration

- a. In general
- b. What constitutes consideration

a. In General

A subscription must be supported by a consideration.

As in the case of contracts generally, a subscription must be supported by a consideration,⁴⁹ and a mere promise to pay, or a naked promise to give is not sufficient or enforceable in the absence of consideration.⁵⁰ The statement of the subscription in the form of a loan by the payee to the subscriber will not evade this result;⁵¹ but, where the subscrip-

- (1) In general
- (2) Work done or obligations or expenses incurred

(1) In General

General rules as to what constitutes consideration for a contract have been applied to subscriptions, but as a matter of public policy courts sustain subscriptions for a public object if any consideration can be found, and have been willing and apparently anxious to discover a consideration which will uphold them.

Although general rules as to what constitutes consideration for a contract have been applied to subscriptions,⁵⁸ and various matters have been held to constitute,⁵⁹ or not to constitute,⁶⁰ consideration, as a matter of public policy courts sustain subscriptions for a public object if any consideration can be found,⁶¹ and the general course of decisions is favorable to their binding obligation.⁶²

The objection of a want of consideration has not always been regarded with favor,⁶³ and the courts have been willing and apparently anxious to discover a consideration which will uphold subscriptions,⁶⁴ with the result that the usual tendency

Charitable purpose

Where the purposes of a nonprofit corporation were to conserve game birds, to establish hatcheries and refuges, and to teach vermin control, such purposes were charitable purposes, with respect to defendant's liability to pay balance remaining due on an allegedly charitable subscription to corporation.—More Game Birds in America v. Boettger, supra.
